POOLE NEW SUPERVISOR

Two Old Residents Laid To Rest During the Week

JOHN JOHNSON PASSES AWAY IN PALO ALTO

One by one the men who have taken an important part in the political life of the county are passing away. The latest to answer the final call is John Francis Johnson, who died at the Palo Alto hospital Saturday morning last after a lingering illness.

Mr. Johnson was prominent in the political life of San Mateo county for over a half century. He was an outstanding figure in the affairs of the peninsula a decade or so ago and was one of the most prominent politicians in this section of the state.

He began his political career as a mere boy at Halfmoon Bay, where he saw the light of day on September 2, 1856. Few men have been longer in public office in this county that Mr. Johnson. Important among his public positions were eight years as deputy county clerk and recorder, ten years as county clerk and recorder, and then later when the county developed sufficiently to separate these two offices, eight years as county recorder.

Mr. Johnson was one of the most successful politicians ever produced in this county. He had a wonderful career never having been defeated for any office although he had been for a quarter of a century in the political arena.

He had certain ideals and during his long career he grimly adhered to these ideals which won him friends and success. Always loyal to his adherents, faithful to his party and firm in carrying his promises he won the confidence of the people who returned him to office term after term.

Mr. Johnson was gifted with all the blandishments of a politician, was affable to a marked degree, courteous and Chesterfieldian in manner. With these attributes it was easy for him to win in the field of politics.

In 1884 Edward Eikerenkotter, the county auditor sought the offices of Clerk and recorder held by J. W. Bicknell, a stalwart democrat. Eikerenkotter was a stripling from Searsville, whose family was then powerful in the ranks of the republican party. Eikerenkotter looked to Halfmoon Bay for a deputy to aid him in the campaign and selected J. F. Johnson, then a clerk for Goodall Perkins & Company, whose boats stopped at Halfmoon Bay. This campaign was one of the hardest ever fought in this county. Bicknel, who had been superior judge, was looked upon as unbeatable. He had the backing of James D. Byrnes, Jack Stafford and other leaders of that time. Eikerenkotter and Johnson saw every voter in the county then numbering 1700. When the ballots were counted it was seen that Eikerenkotter had won by 47 votes. There was a story extant after the famous campaign that the night before the election a 2-horse team was driven from Redwood City to Halfmoon Bay carrying $2000 to be offered Johnson if he would "throw" the election. Johnson was loyal to his promise and spurned the offer.

January 5, 1885 marked Johnson's first appearance in Redwood City. He was then a tall handsome young man who made friends very rapidly. Claude Fox was a copyist under Bicknell and he was retained by Eikerenkotter. Fox afterwards filled almost every deputyship in the court house.

In the campaign of 1886 Eikerenkotter was nominated on the republican ticket and his former antagonist, J. W. Bicknell, received the democratic endorsement. Eikerenkotter won by a majority of 286 votes. Bicknell never again appeared in the field of politics. The campaign of 1888 saw things reversed. Mr. Johnson became the republican nominee for clerk and recorder. He defeated W. J. Savage, present superintendent of schools of Colma by 606 votes. Eikerenkotter was retained as deputy. In 1890 Johnson was again a candidate, defeating the late John F. Ford by 862 votes. In the campaign of 1892 Fred W. Dobbel of Halfmoon Bay was pitted against Johnson. It was the hardest fought battle Johnson ever had. Only the influence of Julius Eikerenkotter, then starting business at South San Francisco, saved the day for Johnson by carrying that place by a big majority. Johnson won by the small margin of 21 votes. The campaign of 1894 saw ex-Sheriff J. H. Hatch arrayed against Johnson. Again Johnson was victorious, defeating Hatch by a wide margin of 482 votes. Here the term of office changed from two to four years. The scene was changed in the campaign of 1898. M. H. Thompson, who had taken the place of Eikerenkotter as deputy, was put forward by Johnson against David Ring. Thompson with the aid of Johnson won by 177 votes. Johnson was retained by Thompson as chief deputy. In the year 1902 the supervisors separated the two offices, Johnson became the republican nominee for recorder and H. W. Schaberg the nominee for clerk. Johnson defeated the late George West by 808 votes and Schaberg won the clerkship over J. V. Swift by the close margin of 38 votes. Johnson made his last campaign in 1906 defeating John W. Morey of Menlo Park by 556 votes. Johnson retired from the political arena at the close of his term. Schaberg also retired giving way to the late Joseph H. Nash.

Mr. Johnson came from an old pioneer Spanish family on his maternal side, whose residence in Halfmoon Bay dates back to the missionary days. Johnson's great-grand mother often attended the mission of Santa Clara, riding on horseback from the coast. Mr. Johnson was as prominent in the social life of the community as he was in the political life. He was the first president of Redwood Parlor N. S. G. W. and had been a financial secretary of the parlor for twenty-five years.

Mr. Johnson died at the Palo Alto hospital Saturday following a break down. He had been ailing for two years. The funeral from the parlor of the James Crowe Company on Monday was largely attended by friends from all parts of the peninsula. Rev. Currie paid the deceased a splendid tribute to his Christian character, his loyalty and generosity.

The remains were followed by a long cortege to Cypress Lawn cemetery, where all that was mortal of a good man, true friend and a splendid character were laid in their last resting place.

The deceased is survived by his widow, a son, J. L. Johnson, a prominent attorney of Santa Cruz and Mrs. I. J. Cooper. Both are graduates of Sequoia Union High School and Stanford.

Answer Filed In Flood Estate

On Monday through her attorneys Ross and Ross and Franklin Swart, Miss Emma Flood, the winsome and accomplished daughter of the late James L. Flood, filed an answer to the contest filed in the superior court by Mrs. Constance May Gavin denying the allegations of Mrs. Gavin. Miss Flood denys that Mrs. Gavin is a daughter of the late James L. Flood and claims the estate is only worth $7,000,000 and not $30,000,000 as alleged by the contestant.

Heretofore the Floods have made no statements, have made no claims, content with trying the case when it gets into court. The San Francisco newspapers have carried large accounts of the other side of the suit. The case will be heard in the superior court on April 14.

Well-known Local Florist Passes Away

Emile Serveau, the widely known florist and nurseryman, passed away at the French hospital in San Francisco at 6:30 a. m. yesterday morning. He was removed to the hospital early the day before. He had been ailing for a long time with a complication of diseases, but his death was wholly unexpected by the family.

Mr. Serveau conducted a flower store in San Francisco. The family one time owned a home at Woodside, where the choisest flowers were grown.

Th deceased is survived by his widow and four grown children.

MUSICIAN AND SPORTSMAN DIES AT HOSPITAL

In the passing of Joseph T. Burns at Mills Memorial hospital last Saturday there is removed from this Vale of Tears a man who was once prominent in the musical life of San Francisco and a citizen who was widely known on the peninsula.

Mr. Burns was born in Iowa seventy years ago but came to San Francisco as a young man. At the age of twenty-five years his father died leaving an estate of $250,000 to be divided between himself and brother, James Burns. The latter passed away a short time after receiving his legacy. He left $60,000 to Hugh Burns, the infant son of Joseph Burns. Shortly after the latter suffered a severe loss in the death of his young and beautiful wife and Mr. Burns and his three-year-old son went to reside with his old friend, J. W. Lowe, whom he had known in school days at St. Mary's College. Both were eleven years old when they met in the old institution and the friendship began there and was cemented by the passing years. Mr. Burns remained in the Lowe family up until his death a period of forty years.

In the seventies Joseph Burns, J. W. Lowe and the late J. F. Ford and the late James Logan were members of the First Regiment Band of San Francisco for many years. Joseph Burns was an accomplished musician, playing the piano, alto and cornet expertly. Mr. Burns was also a baseball player of note, having played short stop in the old St. Mary's team that won the championship of the state in 1872. It was in the years 1872 that he graduated from St. Mary's. He never forgot the teaching of the kind brothers of the institution.

Oft' would his mind revert to the happy days spent in the green hill sides of old St. Mary's on Mission road. In his reminiscent mood he would tell of the many happy events of his youth at the college and recall his school mates, many of whom have long since joined the silent majority. Father Mulligan, who administered the spiritual rites of the Catholic church before he passed away. Charles F. Hanlon, the widely known attorney of San Francisco was another school mate who looked after the legal affair of Mr. Burns. After his admission to the bar his first case was given Hanlon by Mr. Burns, who gave him the settlement of his brother's estate. Hanlon will file the will of his friend today.

The death of Mr. Burns' son, Hugh, some years ago was a severe blow to him, as he never fully recovered from the shock. He lead a retired life here with the Lowe family.

The funeral of the deceased took place Monday from Mount Carmel church. Father Kennedy paid a beautiful tribute to the splendid life of the deceased.

Intrment took place in Holy Cross cemetery, Colma, not far from the site of the institution he loved and which was hollowed by youthful memories.

EXCHANGITES HEAR TALK ON CHINA

An interesting talk on the conditions in China was given before the Redwood City Exchange Club Tuesday evening by Lincoln Tan, a student at the Stanford University. Tan blamed the greater portion of China's troubles on the present tariff policy of that country.

The chairman of the meeting was Harry Hallett. The birthdays of J. J. Shields, A. J. Stebenne, S. L. Ntherton and James Wallace were fittingly obsereved on this occasion and a birthday cake was provided.

TREBILCOCK ESTATE TO BE SETTLED

Editha Trebilcock has applied in the Superior court for letters of adminisration upon the estate of her husband, Harry Trebilcock, who died at his home in Lobitos March 9, 1927.

The estate is valued at $9,500. It consists of cash amounting to $1654.98, a span of horses worth $200, realty at Palo Alto valued at $3000 and an apple orchard at Lobitos, appraised at $4000. Albert Mansfield is the attorney for petitioner.

Harry Tribilcock was a well-known character in the county. For many years it was his custom to bring over from his ranch large loads of apples to be sold in this community and Palo Alto. Every winter for the past forty years found Harry here with his Newton Pippins.

'ROMANTIC AGE' TO BE PRESENTED BY SENIOR CLASS

The cast for the senior class play has been selected and has been working hard on the production for the last three weeks. "The Romantic Age" is the play that is to be presented in the Sequoia auditorium on the evening of April 8. The play is a three-act production by the most famous play-right in America today, A. A. Milne. It is one of the very modern plays and has yet to be played in many of the larger cities of the country. It has enjoyed a long run on Broadway and is often hailed as one of Milne's best. The University of California has produced the play successfully and it was one of the successful dramatic productions of the university season.

Stage Settings Good

LeRoy Stransky, who is in charge of the Sequoia stage crew, and who is known all over the peninsula for his wonderful stage work, has charge of the sets The sets have been finished and are representative of Stranky's best work. One scene, a forest scene is one of the best pieces of work the red-headed stage expert has ever done. The lighting will be especially good and will add much to the fineness of the production. The senior class is out to make this play one of the most successful ever presented in the history of the school. This is entirely possible, as the story is of the calibre that can be made into such a success. The whole result hinges on the cast.

The cast can accomplish wonders and are determined that they will do so. Some of the best actors of the school are in the production. Some of the names that are familiar to all Sequoia dramatic fans are: Clare Griffin, who takes the part of a very humorous philosopher; Desiree Heydenfeldt who has the leading part; Laurance Barbour, who as a half-wit, promises to be a scream; and Hilma Laursen, who takes the part of Jane, a very conservative modern girl.

The leading girls' part is far from a conservative modern girl, she has all that a first-class modern flapper could ever hope to have, and a little more thrown in. "Desiree Heydenfeldt as the heroine is bound to be a big "success," said the play coach, Miss Vivian Melton. The new coach is equally enthusiastic about the possibilities of Jack Tuttle, who is taking the leading part of the very romantic lover.

Tickets will be on sale at Ryan's Drug store and can be reserved there beginning next week. The Sequoia orchestra will provide music for the afair under the direction of Max. Gelber, new Sequoia band and orchestra teacher.

TEACHERS TO HOLD CONVENTION IN REDWOOD CITY

Redwood City was designated as the place of meeting for the fall convention of the bay section of the California Teachers' Association. The convention will take place in the auditorium of the Sequoia Union High School. This was decided upon at the state convention of the association held at Modesto on Saturday. The bay section includes San Francisco, San Mateo, Alameda, Contra Costa, Solano, Stanislaus, Sonoma, Marin, Napa, Santa Clara and San Joaquin counties and represents 7,361 teachers.

At the convention in Modesto, Saturday Oscar H. Olson of this city, who is now principal of the Halfmoon Bay grammar school, was elected a delegate to attend th meeting of the National Education Association to be held in Seattle in June.

Those who represented San Mateo county at the meeting Saturday were Miss Pansy Jewett Abbott, county superintendent of schools, Louise E. Adams of Burlingame, Henry C. Hall of San Bruno. An address by Dr. Almack of Stanford was a feature of the convention.

OLD ESTABLISHMENT UNDER NEW NAME

The George H. Rice Abstract Co. for years one of the best known concern of this city expired this week and was superceeded by the San Mateo County Title Insurance Co. The new concern is practically the old business under a new name as the officers and stockholders are the same. The change, however, was made because of the change in proceedure which has made abstracts of title obsolete and has made title insurance the proper method.

The George H. Rice Abstract Co. was founded in 1874 by the late George H. Rice. In 1908 the company was incorporated. C. M. Doxsee, at present president of the San Mateo County Title Co., has been with the concern for the past 23 years, and is one of the best-known title men of the state.

WOMAN GETS 90 DAYS FOR RECKLESS DRIVING

Found guilty in the court of Recorder Albert Mansfield on a charge of reckless driving, Mrs. Barbara H. Romero on Saturday began serving a 90-day sentence in the jail here. Mrs. Romero was accused of reckless driving, after she had run down and killed Mrs. Anita Caneta of this city on Main street near Five Points.

At the inquest held last week Mrs. Romero stated that she had never driven a car before and did not know how to stop. She drove over the curb and ran onto Mrs. Caneta on the sidewalk. The injured woman was taken to the Community hospital and died a few days later.

The appointment of John W. Poole of this city as supervisor of the Third supervisorial district to succeed the late John MacBain was announced yesterday by Governor C. C. Young. The appointment was quite a surprise as the matter was one on which there had been great speculation since the death of Supervisor MacBain, and prominent men in every section of the township were mentioned for the position.

John Poole was born and raised in Redwood City and is perhaps as thoroughly acquainted with the needs and possibilities of this district as any one in the county. His appointment as supervisor, therefore, has been acclaimed as most propitious for his district. Poole has never taken an active part in partisan politics and goes into office determined to work for the best interests of his district without political bias.

Mr. Poole has been trustee of the Redwood City grammar school district and as such officer has given freely of his time and efforts to advance the school district. He has served on this board for the past ten years.

The dinner was handled by Mrs. Roy A. Hohberger, with the aid of several of the boys.

Russell Brooks of the "Roosevelts" of Redwood City gave a Melophone solo, which was greatly applauded by the boys. The members of this club also gave two vocal selections.

Rev. T. Kelley of South San Francisco talked to the boys on his experience in France while serving with the American Expeditionary Forces. He held the attetion of the boys from start to finish. The United States Weatehr Bureau announces that sunrise on Easter Sunday morning will be 5:31. Exactly at this hour hundreds of thousands of people all over this country will participate in outdooor religious services on tops of hills and mountains in thier immediate vicinity. The first Easter Sunrise services ever held in the world are credited to Mount Rubidoux at Riverside, Calif., and since that time the idea has spread all over this country and to some foreign countries. The fact that these nondenominational services attract hundreds of thousands of sincere reverent people is ample proof that the American people are religiously inclined. In San Francisco where it is said that people do not take their religion seriously enough more than twenty five thousand climb Mount Davidson every Easter Sunday morning and there take a sincere and reverent part in the Easter morning services.

Dreams of a thirty-hour trip from Los Angeles to New York were swept away in a high windstorm at Glendale, which completely wrecked a huge dirigible, under construction for transcontinental service. The loss is $30,000. The big ship, the creation of Thomas B. Slate, Glendale aeronautical engineer, was torn from its mast at the Glendale airport by the winds.

Fred Duns, mechanic at a Bakersfield garage, working on the automobile of H. Kissiner of Bodfish, found fifteen human teeth in the differential, encased in heavy grease. Kissiner purchased the car secondhand, one year ago, and has no opinion as to how the teeth become embedded where found. Police authorities and others believe that a factory mechanic, while the car was being built, had his head in the differential investigating when somebody started the motor, stripping the worker of his teeth.

What appeared recently to be an eruption of Mount Lassen, the United States' ouly active volcano, was proved to be nothing but a shadow cast by the sun shining against a sheet of snow blowing around the peak. From some distances the appearance was that of a wreath of black smoke coming from the volcano, and gave rise to report that the cone again was active. Nearby residents said there are such eruptions of Mount Lassen whenever there is a high wind. In like manner Mount Shasta was also "in eruption" recently, when a gale blew snow all over the town of Mount Shasta, which thus was treated to a snowstorm with the sun shining all the time.

Travelers in automobile stages who let their elbows protrude through open windows cannot hold the carrier company responsible for injuries sustained in passing other vehicles. This according to a decision made by Superior Judge J. B. Landis of Placer county in the damage suit of Coulthard against the Sierra Transit Company, in which the plaintiff sued for damages sustained to his arm when it was struck by a stick of wood protruding from a machine which pased the stage in which the plaintiff was a passenger. Judge Landis ruled that if the plaintiff's elbow had been inside the stage, the accident would not have occurred.

The last remnants of relics from the old Digger Indian mound, located east of Rocklin, are being taken by curiosity seeking tourists, according to reports from that city. The largest and most valuable relics have long since been taken away, it is reported, while there remain but a few beads which can be termed Indian souvenirs, and relics of the day before the white man came to California, a day when thousands of deer roamed the lowlands, fearing nothing save the twang of the Indian arrow.

Foremost in South San Francisco's program for 1927, as announced by President E. P. Kauffmann of the community's chamber of commerce, is intensive co-operation in the immediate widening of the Bay Shore highway through South San Francisco, not alone to permit development of that community's business district, but also "more adequately to serve San Francisco's Municipal airport, which is located on the Bay Shore highway adjoining the city limits of South San Francisco."

Nightwatchman S. H. Goodin of Woodland, computes that he has ridden the streets of Woodland in his car while on duty seven miles nightly for ten years, without vacation, or a total of 25,550 miles, enough to take him around he globe with a few hundred miles left the second lap of a similar journey. This is not all—he has traveled by foot four miles nightly for the same period, a total of 14,600 miles, or several times across the United States, a grand total of 40,150 miles.

Lawrence Luther, 3½-year-old son of Rev. and Mrs. Edgar B. Luther, Woodland, is growing more peppy daily with the best part of a safety pin in his stomach. It was learned that a few nights ago the lad started to examine a large sized safety pin, with the result that he swallowed the large end, the point being broken off. His cries while the pin was passing down his throat, attracted the fond parents, who rushed him to a local sanitarium. The lad seemed to be suffering very little. He was placed on a diet. There have been no evil results so far.

FAMOUS MINING STRIKES

By THOMAS E. STEWARD

Cripple Creek

ON THE Fourth of July, 1892, a housebuilder named Stratton, who gave odd moments to prospecting, was in Colorado Springs preparing to celebrate. Suddenly something that his mind had been working on seemed to become clear. He got on his horse, rode at headlong speed to Cripple Creek and sank a pick into a granite ledge. A few days later when his samples had been assayed he found himself in possession of a claim running $380 a ton in gold and silver. And he was discoverer of one of the richest strikes ever made in the history of mining.

Stratton's hunch at Cripple Creek was not mere luck. He was one of many prospectors who had been working the region, hoping to find rich treasure. Every now and then these men picked up a piece of "float," loose ore carried away from its natural vein by mountain torrents. These pieces of float were of surprising richness, and Stratton was only one of several who had been figuring out which part of the nearby country might be the lode or parent vein. He had gone over the territory as thoroughly as possible and had eliminated in his mind ledge after ledge until he came down to one. That was the one he thought of that morning in Colorado Springs, and it was the right one. Prior to Stratton's historic strike, the Cripple Creek district had endured a bad name. Some placer gold had been washed out, but there had been a number of reported strikes that had been proved false. Miners and prospectors were wary of the district. This may have been one reason why it stood undiscovered until a bare generation ago. For miles around the only building was the old Bennett & Myers Broken Box ranch, whose ranchhouse still stands in the south corner of the town.

Bob Womack had prospected Poverty gulch, famous in Cripple Creek history, before the arrival of Stratton. Through Womack, Stratton had met one Dick Houghton, a veteran mountaineer and prospector, and it was Houghton who put him on the trail of his famous strike.

Meanwhile scores of mines were sunk in the Cripple Creek district. By 1900 the annual output in precious metals was $18,000,000.

Compilations by the United States geological survey indicate that the Cripple Creek district produced $154,628,895 worth of gold between 1891 and 1905, together with which 737,626 fine ounces of silver were recovered. The survey's figures are those of the director of the United States mint.

Cripple Creek gains added interest from the fact that it was the last of the great bonanza strikes and gold rushes prior to the Klondike rush of 1898.

The Tin Mines of the World

ALTHOUGH its name has come to have a meaning almost of scorn can in a vacant lot, tin is one of the most important of the world's metals and is also one whose history is closely associated with romance.

The tin mines of Land's End, in Cornwall, England, probably were the first mines yielding anything but gold or gems, to be worked in all Europe. They are supposed to have been in use as long ago as the Bronze age, before man discovered iron or knew how to make steel. It is known that the people of ancient Tyre and after them the Romans and probably the Carthaginians sent ships to England with slaves who worked these mines for their tin.

Until the early part of the present century British tin mines held an important place in world production, but their output has fallen nearly to nothing against the competition of much larger and richer deposits now worked in other parts of the world.

By the irony of fate, Potosi in Bolivia, which was a world center of silver production 400 years ago under the Spanish and had all the characteristics of the most "roaring" mining camps, has come down from the precious metals to become, today, the single largest center of tin production. Where the bearded conquistadores and the grasping representatives of the Spanish kings killed, stole and cheated in an effort to satisfy their lust for silver and gold, the Aymara Indians toil today bringing up the dull-looking ore that enriches chiefly British and American investors.

Vying with Bolivia as a center of tin production is the Malay peninsula. Until ten years ago the Malay states usually produced more tin per year than did Bolivia, but the scale swung in favor of South America's mountain republic in recent years.

Siam and southern China are other important tin-producing districts. The Chinese are constant users of tinfoil, with which they wrap a variety of things, ranging from foods and firecrackers to idols and gods. It is said that 100,000 Chinese earn their living beating tin into tinfoil by the old-fashioned hand methods and that they use several thousand tons of tin in this manner every year.

Mexico has become a moderate producer of tin in recent years, and there also have been discoveries in Africa, which continent seems destined to reveal colossal deposits of practically every mineral that mankind wants.

The Waste of Wealth

WE read one day in the papers of a mother of three children, who unable to supply her little flock with even the necessities of life and seeing them grow thinner and thinner every day from slow starvation, ended the whole thing by killing the three little ones and herself with gas while they slept. A few days later the same columns record the death of another woman. In very different circumstances this one, surrounded by everything that wealth could buy, and dying, she left a will by which she bequeathed everything she owned, about $20,000, to her dog.

We are glad that the poor woman with the three starving children went first and did not read of this bequest. What pain it must have given to think of forty dollars a week being used to feed and care for a dog, while her own children slowly starved before her eyes. But if she did not read of this, other mothers of under-nourished and needy children did. It us such things as this that cause wild and vengeful thoughts which are followed by wild and vengeful deeds. Such things as this cause the uprisings which have sometimes racked whole empires.

It is an old saying that "strong words come from a weak stomach." It would be truer, we think, to say that strong words and violent deeds come from an empty stomach. The empty stomach has a philosophy of its own, and the sight of deliberate waste by one of that for which another is actually perishing is like a burning brand in a powder keg.

Of course, the money was the woman's, unearned it is true, but still her's under our present code. Doubtless the courts will uphold the validity of the will. We believe, however, that by things such as this are the embers of anarchy fanned into flames. Let one enjoy all he can earn, and earn all he can honestly; but the willful waste of wealth is as great a crime as the dishonest taking of it from another. When courts of law recognize this and prevent it, a great step will have been taken toward Utopia.

A Word Misunderstood

BECAUSE an interpreter of the Nicaraguan constitution translated the word "falta" as 'absence" instead of its correct meaning of "failure" the United States was almost rushed into war with one or more neighboring nations. Too often are wars the result of such little mistakes. In fact, we believe that all wars are directly or indirectly the result of misunderstanding. Different languages, different customs and different manners of thought create what appears to be hostility when in reality it is only difference in national temperment.

To the north we have Canada, a nation speaking the same language, thinking the same thoughts and meeting the same problems in the same way as Americans meet them. What is the result? We will soon celebrate the two hundredth year of peace between the two countries.

To the south we have Mexico. Here the conditions are different. A different race of people, speaking a different language, reacting differently under different stimuli. Here we as the greater nation should be most careful. Here misunderstandings may arise which may have far-reaching effects. A word mistranslated may cause a bloody war or the national temperment misunderstood may be cause of hostility. Knowing these things, we as Americans, should be most careful that what we regard as firm truths are not based upon misapprehensions and false premises.

Witnessed Placing of Span

Edward Stack, the popular deputy county auditor, with a party of friends witnessed the putting in place the last span of the new bridge over Carquinez Straits in the bay of San Francisco, between Solano and Contra Costa counties, last Saturday. The new bridge is the largest cantilever highway structure in the world.

This structure embodying several original features in bridge building will have a total length of 4,482 feet or nearly seven-eighths of a mile. Of that distance, 1,132 feet will be covered by a viaduct approach on the Contra Costa side, at the sugar-refining town of Crockett, just north of the East Bay cities of Richmond, Berkeley, Oakland and Alameda. The bridge proper has two main fairway spans, each 1,100 feet long; a central pier 150 feet long, and two anchor spans of 500 feet each, reaching out to the bulkhead line from either shore.

Its width between trusses is forty feet, including a concrete roadway thirty feet wide, flanked on both sides by footways. The central spans rise 140 feet above mean high tide; the three great towers rise 185 feet above the bridge floor. These towers stand upon concrete piers, reaching down through water of unusual depth for bridge engineering and a thick bottom of sand and gravel —142 feet in all—to bedrock.

The total height of the structure from its base is 467 feet, or only ninety feet less than the Washington monument. When opened to automobile traffic, now carried by four or more ferry lines, the bridge will have cost slightly under $3,000,000.

Taking account of the mass of construction accomplished, the low cost and the local difficulties overcome, chief of which was the plant ing of piers in water nearly 100 feet deep, with a maximum tide of more than nine feet per second, this undertaking may claim high rank among the acievements of bridge builders in any country. A few great bridges are longer, or have longer spans, but these are either suspension bridges like the Brooklyn and the new Philadelphia-Camden Bridges, or if cantilevers, they are of heavier construction, more costly, and were built for railways. Such are the celebrated Forth Bridge in Scotland and the Quebec Bridge.

We Pay Too High a Price

by O. Lawrence Hawthorne

We often pay too high a price
For what men call success!
For pomp or fame, we offer twice
Its worth in happiness.
Too many of us have not learned
What things in life are best;
Intent on trifles, we have turned
From gladness, peace and rest.

We fail to see that love means more
Than prominence or wealth.
Too often we put pride before
The golden gift of health.
We sacrifice to gods of greed
The confidence of friends;
And in our mad pursuit of speed
Our comfort often ends.

We pay too high a price, I say,
For things of little worth,
And thoughtlessly we cast away
The precious things of earth.
Oh, when will men begin to know
That joy supreme is found
Where Nature's wondrous beauties grow,
And love and truth abound?

The Needs of San Francisco for the Future

Foresight is a essential quality necessary for successful speculation. The ability to deduce correctly from known factors gives one the opportunity of preparing in advance and taking advantage of the results of such deductions. A successful real estate speculator foresees that a certain piece of property will become more valuable because he foresees that a particular piece of property will be favored by the growth of population in that sector. A successful stock speculator judges the future business of the corporation whose stock he contemplates purchasing and acts accordingly. Like wise, in the management of any business, foresight is essential. A business man cannot wait until the demand for a product has been developed before preparing to supply it. He must judge that there will be a demand for the product if he does supply it and prepare himself in advance for this situation. If he fails to judge his market correctly, he fails. If he shows proper foresight, he makes money.

An event of momentous importance to San Francisco has taken place this past week. If we were managing San Francisco we would pay particular attention to it and prepare for the future. The event we consider of such great significance is the merging of the Emporium with H. C. Capwell & Company. On the face of it, this may not seem so important to the average citizen of San Francisco—to us it is of paramount importance. It means that Oakland is definitely and finally becoming an entirety in herself. It means that from now on Oakland will be a rival of San Francisco. It means that the growth of Oakland will be independent of our growth and it means that San Francisco must look for her sustenance and nourishment elsewhere.

There has been tremendous agitation for a bridge to connect us with the East Bay. We believe a bridge to be a very necessary thing, but we also firmly believe that a bridge will help Oakland far more than it will help San Francisco. A commutor will be able to leave his or her working place, return to Oakland rapidly and conveniently, and do his shopping locally instead of in San Francisco as he has done in the past. The establishment of the Emporium is the forerunner of the establishment of other San Francisco shops in Oakland, and it means the beginning of a business development for Oakland such as she has never seen before.

What is San Francisco going to do for growth?

Look to the Peninsula—To the south of this city lies the solution Acres of land, climatically and scenically beautiful, potentially convenient to our centers, and suitable for our growth, lie practically next door to us. It is not necessary to build a Fifty Million Dollar bridge to connect it. All that is necessary is the proper foresight and co-operation on the part of all our political and business interests to see that boulevards and streets are laid out suitable for the needs of a modern city. This does not mean that these boulevards and streets should be planned for obsolete horsedrawn vehicles of twenty years ago. They should be planned with the idea of giving the automobile free and easy access to our business center. They should be planned with the idea of segregating passenger and freight traffic. They should be planned with the idea of providing lateral feeders, and they should be built as promptly as possible. Subways to the heart of our city from the south should be built now. Business areas should be determined upon. Steam and electrical transportation planned. Foresight and more foresight for all our transportation problems should be the watchword of every citizen.

San Francisco cannot continue to give its life blood to its neighboring cities without receiving nourishment in the shape of new citizens and their potential wealth to replace what she loses. She cannot give indefinitely without exhausting the reservoir. It has been the wealth of San Francisco that has developed Los Angeles. It has been the wealth of San Francisco that has developed practically the whole state of California and the other bay cities. San Francisco must look to her own development from now on.

It is the Peninsula that will prove our salvation. Our foresight, if we have any, tells us this. It is the ePninsula that will attract the Eastern Tourist and keep him out here. It is the Peninsula that offers space for recreation and play. It is the Peninsula that offers acres for homes and gardens. It is the Peninsula that must house the population that is going to make San Francisco the city her natural situation destines her to be. It is the Peninsula that more than any other factor will insure to San Francisco that supremacy in California's affairs that she held when the broad-minded, farsighted, brave, and generous pioneers had control of her destinies.

SUMMER HEALTH SCHOOLS ARE SUCCESSFUL

By Fitch C. E. Mattison, M. D.
Pasadena, California
Member Gorgas Memorial Inst..

The average mother is not always well trained for motherhood. She often lacks training in the proper hygienic care of the child. Very few know how to prepare food. Such things as the proper development of the child's body is usually left to the child to work out by itself, by undirected play.

The proper feeding and physical development of a young colt or puppy is sometimes more scientifically carried out than is the raising of children. The answer to these facts is the health agencies in or near the home which will meet the needs of the greater number of children.

When it was found that 10 per cent of the 300,000 school children of Los Angeles county suffer from malnutrition, it became the ambition of all the health agencies to see that these children were brought back to physical efficiency.

Nine school districts assisted in the work. As the school buildings are unused during the two months of summer and the parents of the average child cannot afford the expenses in the usual health camps, it was thought best to use the schools.

The school nurse of the district selected twenty to thirty children who were definitely under weight or had contact with cases of tuberculosis. The children were enrolled for a period of eight weeks with a five days a week program. Carefully mimeographed sets of instruction covering all phases of the work were given to the staff.

Before enrollment each child was given a careful physical examination. The basis of the plan was an experiment conducted in the School of Education at the University of Chicago, by Lydia J. Roberts, assistant professor of home economics.

The summer school, situated locally, made it possible for the mother to be present at least once each week when she received instruction in dietetics and the preparation of foods and was given an opportunity to observe the machinery for health training in actual operation. Mothers were able to see satisfactory gains in weight ,without changing anything but the health habits and curing of physical defects without removal from the home. Furthermore the co-operation in the removal of defects, such as poor teeth, bad tonsils, etc., was very good because the mothers were in close contact with the operation of the schools.

Best of all, the mothers received the instructions enthusiastically and in most instances continued to follow out the plan laid down for the child.

This plan is applicable in any school district throughout the United States during the months when school activities, as a whole, cease. School nurses are usually relieved of these duties, and the personnel for health activities is easy to secure.

ULCER OF THE STOMACH
By A. C. Stokes, M. D.
Omaha, Nebraska
Member Gorgas Memorial Institute

Sores occur on the inside of the body as well as on the outside. They frequently ocur in all parts of the digestive tract, including the mouth and the rectum. Most of these sores recover quickly and readily, even without treatment, but some of them remain and become chronic.

Such sores occur in the mouth where they can be seen and treated, also in the rectum where they can also be seen, treated, and cured. Another area of the body where such sores occur is the area around the outlet of the stomach.

These sores are called ulcers of the stomach, about which we hear so much. They are usually single. Most of them occur within two inches one side or the other of the stomach outlet. When they become chronic they produce trouble.

Many symptoms of the stomach are not due to ulcers, and it often takes the keenest judgment and the most elaborate methods to determine whether or not an ulcer is present. The symptoms are: first, pain, which occurs from one-half an hour to three hours after eating and usually continues until something is taken into the stomach again. Sometimes the pain continues only a few hours and stops of its own accord, and appears again two or three hours after eating and stops again in two or three hours, even without taking anything into the stomach. This so-called rhythmical sign of pain is very characteristic of ulcer.

The second symptom of ulcer is tenderness over the upper part of the abdomen about two inches to three inches directly above the navel. Tenderness in this area may be considered as pointing toward ulcer. These symptoms, together with a proper X-ray study of the stomach will enable a physician to determine whether there is an ulcer.

Microscopic eramination of the stomach contents frequently discloses the presence of blood which comes from the sore. Sometimes this bleeding is very severe and occasionally people die from hemorrhage of the stomach caused by an ulcer eating off a good sized artery. Vomiting often accompanies ulcer and, when it does, blood may be found in the vomitus in a large per cent of cases.

The cause of ulcer is very much in dispute. It is curious that the chronic ulcer only in the areas mentioned. The structure of the tissues may have something to do with their occurence here, but is probably that choric disease, such as decayed teeth, bad tonsils, chronic inflammation in the nose and cavities of the head, or chronic appendicitis, chronic gall-bladder, or perhaps stone in the kidney, or any other chronic disease which is caused by germs, may have something to do with the production of ulcer.

It is, therefore, well to keep yourself in the best possible health by frequent general physical examinations of the body. When an ulcer is developed, the treatment is often very difficult. The first principle of treatment which your physician will recommend is diet.

EVEN JUDGES NEED KNOWLEDGE OF SEXUAL PERVERSION WHICH LEADS TO CRIME

By Charles E. Barnett, M. D.
Ft. Wayne, Ind., Member Gorgas Memorial Institute.

Our present "open season" for crime removes the restraint of the sexual perverts in their murderous attacks. Their fiendish atrocities are appearing in increasing numbers in the headlines of our daily papers. Capital punishment is the only possible preventive treatment that can discourage this criminality. These cowardly attacks always take advantage of the defenseless.

Instead of a moron, degenerate, or other vague names, why not use the word that means just what he or she is?

The judges, juries, in fact all the officers of the law, as well as newspaper reporters, need education regarding this subject, in order to help protect innocent people. This instruction they should get from their physicians or from books covering the subject in the public [illegible].

There is a gradual crescendo from merely touching the hand, street corner "lizard," "Jack the peeper," "Jack the ripper," until intense cruelty, such as murder by strangulation or crushing of the head is the only stimulus. Erotic impulse knows little restraint.

These murders come from all walks in life. I know of no ferocious animal that is more dangerous than this type of degenerate.

The lure of money is so great that "unfairness" is frequently used just in order to get more money. This is exemplified today in many theaters and moving pictures, with their use of physical exposure and vulgarity as their drawing card. Some censors, as a matter of policy, wear "smoked glasses." The point is, however, that this education and example is especially dangerous for the person who is inclined toward unusual excitement.

These conditions will have to be frowned upon by the better thinking people, whose criticism would carry great weight, and it should be their duty to criticize for their children's sake.

Public sentiment should demand sterilization, making these perverts inoffesnive like the Eunuch of olden times. In the malignant murderous type execution immediately upon conviction is the safer plan.

BONE GRAFTS IN REHABILITATION SURGERY

By Fred H. Albee, M. D.
New York City, Member Gorgas Memorial Institute.

"Good timber does not grow in ease;
The stronger wind, the tougher trees;
The farther sky, the greater length;
The more the storm, the more the strength."

Thus does the poet state the biologico-mechanical law of stress which gives the surgeon added courage to graft bone from one part of the body to another, as a means of replacig lost bone, or to reconstruct abnormal joints. For the greater the stress placed upon a bone, the denser and stronger it will become.

Thus, a graft that is much less in diameter than the bone it replaces will, under the stimulus of the law, slowly become many times its former diameter. To illustrate, a graft the size of a lead pencil will restore the full diameter of the thigh bone; that is, will proliferate approximately 25 times its cross section diameter.

Another fortunate feature of this law is that, when the graft has reached the size adequate to withstand the stress which comes upon it, it ceases to proliferate. Also, the external contour and internal structure will adapt themselves to withstand complicated lines of force.

The operation of this law is, however, wholly contingent upon the continuity of the graft, and therefore the surgeon must, by temporary splint support and immobilization, protect it from undue stress that might cause fracture during the early period when the graft size and strength are incapable of withstanding the stress which its new environment brings upon it.

The reasons for immobilization in the case of the bone graft immediately after insertion are very similar to those for the tree graft following its implantation into the host branches of trees. The wind rocking the apple tree graft in its inlay gutter will break up the wood union and vegetable circulation and interfere with early cellular growth. The tree surgeon guards against this.

Similarly, motion of a bone graft with its host bone will not only break up delicate capillaries, but interfere with the early cellular growth which has attempted to unite the two. Therefore, the surgeon applies, postoperatively, well padded splints in the form of plaster of Paris.

The surgeon obtains and inserts his grafts by means of the eelctrically driven bone mill under the most modern aseptic methods. These tools revolve with a high degree of speed, thus not only insuring their efficiency as bone-cutting instruments, but also avoiding shock, since the small nerves in the bony structures are capable of transmitting impulses resulting in shock to the brain centers when severed by a cutting instrument working at this degree of speed.

This phenomen is well illustrated by the soldier dropping in his tracks from shock when hit in a non-vital spot by a spent rifle bullet, whereas if he is penetrated similarly by a bullet at a high velocity he will walk on without shock.

After the graft is inserted the surgeon seals it off from infecting bacteria by covering it up entirely with soft parts, muscle, fat, and skin tissues. Precision of technic is essential.

The use of the bone graft as indicated has enabled the surgeon in the past decade not only to save many thousand limbs, but to restore disfiguring loss of bone, such as that of the jaw, etc. Nature and the law of stress bring the graft to desired size.

MANY SEEKING OPPORTUNITIES IN CALIFORNIA

The eyes of people in all parts of the entire world are on California seeking opportunities for investments with the view of eventually coming to this state and settling according to R. C. Martens, president Californian Opportunities, Inc., of San Francisco. Hundreds of inquiries have already been received asking for locations and information for farm lands, business properties, California products and numerous other subjects from nearly every country of the globe, including New Zealand and Australia. At the same time the concern has received numerous inquiries from real estate operators in all parts of California seeking buyers and settlers.

California Opportunities, Inc., organized only two months ago with national and international connections, has made marketing arrangements for many California-made products which have heretofore never enjoyed a foreign business. In addition, it is completing the formation of two manufacturing industries in the state and is now investigating locations for the establishment of the factories. Other new trade channels are now being negotiated for other industries.

The organization, which was formed by a number of realtors in northern and central California, serves as a statistical and general information clearing house to assist the newcomer and the prospective new Californian in properly establishing himself under the most favorable conditions. This service starts at the source of the prospect such as the home of the expected settler, whether it be Christiana, Rome, London or any other foreign or American city or town. It offers to the interior business man and realtor a concentrated library of scientific and practical information on farms and business openings and extends his influence and operations to all parts of the globe without additional cost or expense to the property owner.

A. M. Donnelly, realtor, is the local agent.

John Wilkes Booth a Confederate Spy?

Gen. Phil Sheridan always believed that at one time in the Civil war he had in his employment as a spy John Wilkes Booth. He had employed a man named Lomas as a spy, but suspected he was dealing with each of the opposing armies. One day Lomas brought a man to Sheridan and introduced him as Mr. Renfrew, who also wished to serve as a spy. Just then Sheridan wished to have some bridges destroyed and sent the two men out on this mission. He secretly assigned a scout to watch they. Their attempt failed, but they had plausible explanations. They were sent out again, after Sheridan had taken pains to let them know there was to be a big fox chase on a certain date in which many of the officers were to take part. It was a ruse to throw the Confederates off their guard when the spies should carry the report to them. At the time mentioned Sheridan had planned to strike hard. The men were shadowed and found to have gone to Confederate headquarters. They were arrested on their way back, but escaped. When Sheridan saw pictures of Booth after Lincoln's death, he recognized him as the spy Renfrew.—Kansas City Times.

Weed Has High Rank in Forces of Nature

Weeds are the wound dressers of the soil. Whenever man or nature makes a scar, the vigorous, coarse-fibered weeds find out the spot and straightway mend the injury. Hated and much objurgated, the weed, of whatever breed, is one of the most useful forces of nature. The farmer regards it as a foe, the gardener as a nuisance. In truth, it is a friend that persists, regardless of ill treatment and attempts at extirpation. Soil, to preserve its strength, must be protected with some sort of nature covering, otherwise the rains leach it, or wash away the precious particles of mold that make it reproductive. Man neglects this factor in his dealings with the earth. Plowed fields are allowed to go uncovered after the crop is harvested. Washouts are left to take care of themselves. So is burnt-over land. In all three instances, great damage results, and much more would follow but for the energy of the weed family.—Don C. Seitz in the Outlook.

Became Great Industry

The metal workers' industry, introduced in Colonial times, developed to such an extent that as early as 1812 it was said that the silverware manufactured in America was sufficient to supply the demand. Throughout the last century the industry has continued to develop. For a time American craftsmen depended largely on France for designs and patterns, but in recent years there has been a notable advance in the individuality of our national art. The work of designing in precious metals has often been handed down from father to son, remaining in the same family for generations.

Do Not Force Plants

If a plant has been growing thriftily for some time and then begins to go back, it probably needs a rest, and no amount of forcing will do any permanent good. It will, says Nature Magazine of Washington, do a definite harm. During the resting period, a plant is better if left entirely alone in a dry, cool cellar. It will of its own accord, and without any attention of any kind, begin to put out new green shoots. When these new shoots show themselves the plant should be given a thorough watering, a repotting if necessary, and brought up into its place in the sun. After it is growing well it may be given fertilizer.

Boy Helped Engineers

Theodore G. Hulett, who supervised the construction of the first suspension bridge across Niagara, relates that a premium of $10 was offered to the first boy who should successfully fly over the gorge his kite string and fasten its ends to a tree on either side. A boy named Homan Walsh, a resident of Lincoln, Neb., was successful. The following day a stronger line was drawn over by the kite string, and then a rope of sufficient strength to haul over the iron cable. By means of this rope the iron cable was carried across and its ends secured to the solid rock. It crossed the gorge five miles above Lewiston.

Blue Prints for a Home

Newlywed, to the real estate salesman who is trying to sell her a home: Why buy a home? I was born in a hospital ward, reared in a boarding school, educated in a college, courted in an automobile, and married in a church; get my meals at a cafeteria, live in an apartment; spend my mornings playing golf, my afternoons playing bridge; in the evening we dance or go to the movies; when I'm sick I go to the hospital, and when I die I shall be buried from an undertaker's. Why should we buy a home, I ask you? All we need is a garage with bedroom.—The Outlook.

Combining Melodies

Counterpoint is the art of combining melodies according to the laws of harmony. Composers of anything more elaborate than a song must have a knowledge of counterpoint, and all good song composers possess such knowledge. There is no "flow" in music for more than one voice; unless it has the spirit of counterpoint, it is just a mass of meaningless chords.

The impressive services of the order were conducted by W. A. Crowell, who was in charge of the funeral. Twelve friends of the deceased acted as pallbearers. The active pall bearers were E. H. Werder, Franklin Swart, T. C. Rice, D. P. Flynn. F. W. Johnson and Harry Morrey. The honorary pall bearers were C. V. Thompson, Manuel Francis, T. L. Hickey, H. Amphlet, F. E. Beer and Geo. A. WILL IS FILED

D. P. Flynn on Tuesday filed the last will and testament of Percy W. Selby, who died on January 22, 1927. The will is holographic and was executed at Ogden on March 9, 1914. Half of the estate is left to the wife, Louise Hamilton Selby of Paris, and the other half to his two daughters, Carmen Selby Johnson of Los Angeles and Jane Selby Hunt of Pebble Beach, Monterey county. Mrs. Selby is named as executrix to serve without bonds. She has been residing in Paris for some time and has written to E. J. Pringle, attorney for the estate, asking and requesting that D. P. Flynn, a friend of the Selby family and one who is familiar with the affairs of the estate having assisted in settling the estate of the late Mrs. Selby, mother of the decedent, be appointed administrator, to act in her stead, and he has consented to act.

The petition for the probate of the will states that the value of the property of the estate exceeds the sum of $10,000 but it is believed the value will reach the $75,000 mark. It consists of money in bank, contracts on real estate and trust deeds and real estate.

Following is the will in full:

Ogden, Utah, March 9, 1914

I make the following writing as my will for the testamentary disposition of my property. I give to my wife, Louise, one half of all my property, real or personal. I give to my daughter, Carmen Selby Johnson, one quarter of all my property, real or personal. I give to my daughter, Jane Selby Hayne, one quarter of my property, real or personal,

I nominate my wife to be the executrix of my will, to act without bonds for any purpose, giving her full power to sell any real or personal estate without order of court.

Pupils Meet With Kiwanians

The members of the Iota Zeta, high school service club, met with the Redwood City Kiwanis Club at the regular luncheon meeting of that organization on Wednesday and put on the program for the hour. The Iota Zeta club was sponsored by the local Kiwanis club and is organized along lines similar to the service organization.

The meeting Wednesday was entirely in the hands of the high school boys, and a very interesting program had been prepared by them. Wesley Haydock, president of the high school club, introduced Ray Mulford, the chairman of the meeting.

An interesting feature of the program was a series of chalk cartoons executed by John Maloney. A saxophone solo by Charles Merrill, accompanied by Eugene Bone, was much appreciated.

The speaker of the meeting was Prof. John Gill, vice-principal of the high school. The topic of the address was "Types of Service." The address was intended primarily for the boys, but was of interest to the business men of the club

State to Conduct Study of Motor Accident Causes

The causes of motor vehicle accidents in California will hereafter be determined under an amendment to the state law sponsored before the current session of the legislature by the California State Automobile Association. As a step in prevention of accidents on streets and highways, the Association proposes that safety studies be made by the state on the basis of reports to be filed with the State Motor Vehicle Division on all accidents involving injuries or death to any person.

The amendment requires that the State Division shall tabulate and analyze these reports annually or at more frequent intervals and compile statistics on locations and causes of vehicular accidents. Heretofore, there has been no such compilation. Failure to render reports is made a misdemeanor and it is expected that, for the first time in California, complete facts and figures on automobile accidents will be available.

The law at present contains a requirement that accidents involving personal injuries or death shall be reported to police departments. Thus the information available has been scattered, lacked uniformity and was incomplete. The Automobile Association proposes that all such data be now centered in the State Motor Vehicle Division.

Police reports in incorporated cities will be forwarded to the Motor Vehicle Division and outside of cities such reports must be made directly to the State Division within 24 hours after the accidents, under the proposed amendment.

In addition the Motor Vehicle Division is permitted to require drivers involved in accidents as well as witnesses to make supplemental reports if the original statement is deemed insufficient. Such statements shall be for the information of the division only and shall not be admissible as evidence in either civil or criminal trials growing out of the accident reported.

The Automobile Association points out that the statistical data on accidents thus gathered will constitute a faluable record of information that will be of considerable assistance in the work of reducing street and highway accidents.

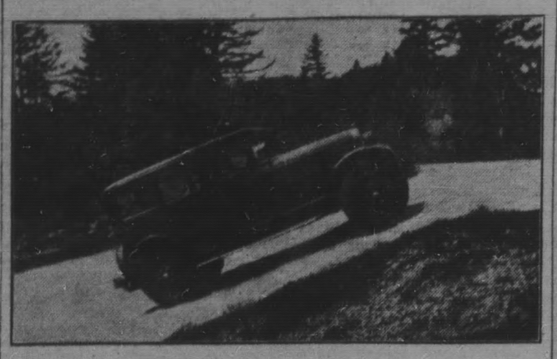
Nash Advanced Six Makes Heavy Hills in High



Nash Advanced Six Negotiating A Steep Pitch on King's Mountain Road West of Redwood City

Out of Woodside we spun in a brand New Nash Advanced Six, so new in fact, that the paint on the exhaust pipe still smoked a little and we were apprehensive as to the climbing ability of an engine which had not yet been limbered up in use. Our party consisted of three, H. B. Fowler, local Nash dealer, Henry Peterson, his sales manager, and a representative of the Times-Gazette. Our object was to see if a Nash just as delivered could climb the steep pitches of the Kings Mountain grade, without shifting to a lower gear.

The engine purred merrily as with Fowler at the helm, the car was headed off the asphalt of the Woodside road onto the steep, crooked and none too smooth dirt surface of the mountain road. Roads make little difference to Nash, however, either as to riding qualities or in traction.

We had had experience on this road before and were a little skeptical, rather waiting in fact for the chug, chug of the laboring engine which indicates that it has done all it can and is asking for the aid of a lower gear. But not with the Nash "enclosed car" motor. With its seven bearing crank shaft humming as eveningly as the balance staff of a fine watch, this nicely balanced mechanism purred up the steepest grades without a waver.

This bigger motor has full force-feed lubrication to all main bearings, connecting rod bearings, and camshaft bearings; and oil is also forced up to the rocker-arm shaft and thence fed to the rocker-arm mechanism.

In addition it has an air cleaner, gas filter, and oil purifier—three scientific devices that add importantly to engine efficiency.

The motor is insulated from the frame at suspension points by rubber cushions which contribute materially to the quietness of operation.

And the motor is entirely encased so as to absolutely prevent entrance of all dust and dirt.

During the entire trip the engine had not missed a shot. We were surprised at the freedom from vibration which seemed to be so evident a feature of this car. "That," explained Fowler "is because of the seven bearings of the crank-shaft. With four more main bearings than most other six cylinder cars the strain on the crank shaft is greatly reduced and the vibration is practically eliminated." The seven bearinged crank-shaft is a feature on all Nash cars.

As we approached the top of the grade, not having found a pitch would stop the powerful motor of the car, Fowler turned from the road and climbed the steep bank which seperates this road from the Skyline boulevard at the summit. Even here on a grade of almost 45 degrees the Nash showed its marvelous power and stamina, climbing the steep bank as though it were a part of its daily routine.

Among the advancements now included in the Nash is a new type crankcase breather—an arrangement designed to prevent crankcase condensation and dilution as well as to carry gases and odors be neath the car.

Another improvement is the new-type muffler, which remarkedly heightens the quietness of engine operations by leading the heated exhaust gases around the outer surface of the shell in order that they may cool and in cooling contract before entering the inside manifold, leaving a smaller volume of gas to be muffled.

An "agitator"—so named from its action—has been devised to revolve under the intake screen of the oil pump and prevent coagulation of oil on the screen in cold weather.

Further to heighten engine efficiency a "thermostat" has been provided. It automatically functions to [illegible] circulation until precisely the right running temperature of the motor has been attained and then permits water circulation. In this way the most efficient operative temperature is constantly maintained, excessive choking eliminated and crank-case dilution reduced.

European Writer Gives Views On Cars Built In America

Local Willys-Knight Dealer Receives Copy from Illustrated London News

The European's idea of the Amrican built car, which has been receiving a large amount of attention during the past several months is given in an article appearing in the London Illustrated News and written by John Prioleau, an English authority on motoring matters.

A copy was sent to Davies Bros., local representative for Willys-Knight and Whippet motor cars this week from which the following has been taken to show what the Europeans have to say.

"The American car has for years been in many respects quite unlike the European car, and it is odd to see that, although a number of American manufacturers include in their advertisements the statement that this or that model is "on European lines," the main underlying "feel" of American performance remains much the same. It is apparently slight, this difference in performance. To me, who spends many days a month driving all sorts of cars, there remains in an American way something definitely different. The Americans have means and we have ends which they do not attempt to attain. It is a very poor definition, but it must suffice.

"The new Willys-Knight model "70" six cylinder, is perhaps one of the most difficult of the American cars I have ever tried to describe. It is a paradoxical business altogether, because the engine, of the sleeve-valve type, is the invention of an American, and only came to fame when it was adopted exclusively by an English firm. Therefore, I have to consider a purely American invention through European eyes.

"Yet this Willys-Knight is quite unlike any other Knight six-cylinder engine I have ever driven, and the way in which it dealt with its load on the occasion of my trial was purely "American." The bore and stroke are 74.6 mm. by 111 mm., and the crank-shaft is carried in seven bearings, the pistons being of die-cast aluminum. The cooling is by the pump, with a thermostat incorporated in the system. The oil is fed by pressure to all "high-duty" bearings (a peculiarly happy American expression), and by splash to the valve sleeves and pistons. In fact, the design is orthodox. The usual three-speed gear-box, ventrally controlled, is fitted, the main feature being the remarkable noiselessness of the gears in action at high speeds. All the controls are properly accessible, and driving the car is a comfortable business. The Willys-Knight picks up extremely well, and gets away with its load in an inspiring fashion. It is an excellent top-speed hill climber, as, indeed, are most first-class American cars, and when it is necessary to drop down to second speed, the engine picks up, in a manner which is decidedly adequate. It is easy to maintain a high average.

"The springing is good, and so is the steering, and when you have included these you have practically got the performance of any ordinary first-class European car of about one-and-a-half litres capacity. Wherein then, lies the difference between American performance and European performance? I wish I knew how to answer that question.

"The Willy-Knight has an extraordinary smooth pull, a soft and elastic power. So have at least a dozen or possibly more European cars. It steers delightfully at high speeds; its four- wheel brakes do their work unobtrusively; its springs smooth out the effects of pot-holes, and enable you to corner at high speeds.

"It would be absurd to pretend that, apart from appearance, the general design of American car has been adapted to Europeans that they use on this continent. We do, and sometimes get, what we think we want, yet in all barest justice to say that the Willys-Knight, at its price, is nearer to fulfilling the reasonable wishes of the average European motorist than any car I have yet driven."

DEATH VALLEY'S WONDERS OPEN TO MOTOR TOURING

Opening of Death Valley to motorists with the recent improvement of roads and establishments of hotels in this scenic southwestern desert area is reported by the California State Automobile Association. Many motorists have made the Death Valley tour during the past winter season and many are planning to include it in their next winter's tours. The Automobile Association announced this week that it is preparing for early issuance a detailed map showing mileage, stopping places and points of interest in this region. This map, which will outline various itineraries through the interesting desert area, will be available at Association touring bureau offices throughout the state.

The Automobile Association Touring Bureau pointed out that this trip is not recommended for the summer months but that tours to this region should be arranged for the period between November 1 and April 15. After April 15, the Association warned it is not wise nor safe to atttempt to drive in Death Valley.

It is always best to obtain latest road information before planning this desert journey, the Association advises, because heavy rains often cause washouts and roads may be closed from time to time. Motorists should bear in mind that description of a road as "fair" in this region may seem a misnomer but considering the type of country and the fact that roads receive little mainenance, experienced drivers will be really surprised at their condition.

BOAT LOADED WITH NASH CARS LEAVES MILWAUKEE

CARGO OF NASH CARS ON MAIDEN TRIP OF LAKE MICHIGAN CAR FERRY, MADISON, LEAVE MILWAUKEE FOR GRAND HAVEN AND THE EAST.

Loaded with a full cargo of Nash cars the new Great Lakes ferry Madison steamed out of Milwaukee for Grand Haven, Michigan, last week on its maiden trip. The boat, recently christened with milk at Manitowoc, Wisc., is described as one of the finest and best equipped ships of its kind on the Great Lakes and is operated by the Grand Trunk division of the Canadian National Railways.

The maiden voyage of the boat was marked by a celebration in which officials of the Grand Trunk railroad took part. Representatives of the Nash Motors Company also were in the gathering at the Grand Trunk docks in Milwaukee. The cargo, comprising an assortment of Nash advanced six, special six and light six cars, was carried by the Madison to Grand Haven where it was transferred to railroad cars and rushed to points east; some of it was scheduled for reloading aboard ship in New York for transport abroad.

The loading of the Madison at the Milwaukee docks with its cargo of Nash cars presented an interesting picture. As the first car went aboard, it was greeted with a loud cheer by spectators and the crew. The Madison, in addition to its large freight capacity, is equipped to handle 35 passengers.

Add $50 or $60 to the down payment on a Four —and get a NASH

Nash 6-cylinder 7-bearing performance costs little, if any, more than 4-cylinder performance.

You can buy a Nash Light Six enclosed car for as little as $925 f. o. b. factory—an amazingly low price for a car like this.

For besides the exceptional smoothness of Nash 6-cylinder, 7-bearing performance, the new Light Six models of Nash have every worthwhile feature of modern motoring.

Full force-feed engine lubrication—decidedly unusual in cars under $1000; Nash mechanical 4-wheel brakes, with front wheel brakes totally enclosed to protect their efficiency.

5 Budd-Michelin steel disc wheels; Alemite high pressure chassis lubrication, instead of old fashioned grease cups.

And, in the closed car bodies, genuine hardwood frames with rounded rear roofs like the costliest custom cars of Europe and America.

You can buy this car for about the same price as one of the higher priced fours. At the most, you'll only need to add $50 or $60 to your first payment. Drive the two cars, and you'll certainly decide you would rather have the Nash!

PREPARATIONS FOR SCHOOL WEEK BEING COMPLETED

Arrangements for the observance here of Public School Week are being completed by officers of Redwood City Lodge No. 168, F. & A. M. which is sponsoring the movement here. A meeting is being planned at the Sequoia Auditorium on April 28.
Although originally instituted by the Masonic fraternity the ceremonies have attracted such wide attention wherever held that they are now a public nature and the general public is invited. The Parent-Teacher Associations of the state have also taken an active interest in this work. The following announcement was sent out this week by Mrs. F. O. McColloch, state president of that organization to the 123,000 members of California:
"To California belongs the credit of conceiving the idea of public school week. For eight years our golden state has celebrated in honor of our free educational institutions.
"The World war so seriously affected our public schools that it was deemed advisable to set aside a week for the acquainting, not only parents, but the public in general with the work and activities of the public schools.
"No greater asset has America than the public school. The nation's future is dependent upon these institutions which provide the children of America with the best educationally. The California Congress of Parents and Teachers pledges loyal support to Public School Week and wishes it success."

COMES TO VISIT FRIEND, REMAINS FOR FUNERAL

To come to visit his friend, after not having seen him for almost sixty years and then to arrive just in time for his funeral was the sad experience of W. H. Campbell last Monday. Campbell had lived in Halfmoon Bay as a boy and had gone to school with John F. Johnston. He left Halfmoon Bay in 1868 and had not met his friend since that time. He came to this city on Monday, planning on going over old times with his former school mate, but found that he had died two days before. He attended his funeral instead.
The Campbells were well-known residents of the coastside many years ago. The elder Campbell at that time conducted the Occidental hotel in Halfmoon Bay and was a correspondent for the Times-Gazette from the coastside.

PRODUCTIONS THAT HAVE CIVIC WORTH PRAISED BY MAYER

Executive Lauds Peace Time Cooperation With Federal Enterprise as in War.

Perhaps the greatest patriotic service the motion picture producer can render at this time is the creation of pictures that entertain and at the same time further the cause of any of the various important branches of city and federal services, according to Louis B. Mayer, head of the big Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios in Culver City.
"During war-time, every producer rallied to th cause of the country," said Mr. Mayer. "This important work can and should be carried on by the producers in peace time as well.
For A Worthy Cause
"In 'The Fire Brigade' Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is attempting to do for the firemen what 'The Big Parade' did for the soldier. It will be one hundred percent entertainment and yet it will further the cause of the firemen as no single agency has ever done before. Produced under the supervision of the Fire Chiefs of the United States and Canada, this epic will render particular service to a worthy cause.
"The international scope of the motion picture screen makes it possible for the American film producer to play an important part in world-wide affairs. It is a field that affords motion picture producers tremedous opportunity to render a distinct and important service and one that is being developed by Metro-Goldwyn Mayer."
Two hundred little girls from the Los Angeles Orphanage had the thrill of their lives when they worked in "The Fire Brigade," which is coming to the Sequoia Theatre next Monday and Tuesday, April 4 and 5.

ANCIENT BALL GAME PROVIDES MUCH LAUGHTER

Pittsburgh Plays New York In Thrilling Climax of "Casey At The Bat"

Baseball never gave its fans a greater thrill than the one that was contributed some twenty-six years ago. It happened at the old Polo Grounds while New York was playing Pittsburgh in the last game of an exciting series.
From the very start everything had been nip-and-tuck. But by the end of the eighth inning, even the most loyal Giant rooter freely conceded the game to Pittsburgh. Then, a funny thing happened. Two weak hitters got on base and Casey, mightiest of the diamond giants strode to the home plate with a wicked cudgel. His eyes emitted sparks and the poor opposition pitcher prayer for rain. But nothing came and the umpire shouted, "Play ball-"
His first horsehide crossed the plate, as did the second. Casey had two strikes on him and the mob implored him to knock the cover off the next ball. He set himself and took a mighty swing. Never had such a prodigious effort been made, but the ball wasn't even near the willow. Pittsburgh gave a sigh of relief. The game was theirs.
Casey won the "royal razzberry" and went to the locker room in a daze but the public never knew that Casey was exonerated because a trick ball was found to have been used by the smoky city pitcher!
Don't believe a word of the above until you see "Casey at the Bat," Wallace Beery's screamingly funny comedy, arriving at the Sequoia Theatre next Wednesday and Thursday, April 6 and 7. Paramount has given its new star a great story and a superb cast. Hector Turnbull, featured producer, wrote the story and supervised filming. Ford Sterling, Zasu Pitts and Sterling Holloway head Beery's supporting cast. Monte Brice directed.

Selwood of Sleepy Cat

By FRANK H. SPEARMAN

Copyright by Charles Scribner's Sons. WNU Service.

STORY FROM THE START

John Selwood, gentleman gambler and manager of a stage line at Sleepy Cat, comes upon a settler whose wagon has mired in a creek. He helps get the outfit clear, after picking up a girl's shoe and seeing and being attracted by the supposed owner thereof in Fyler's (the settler's) wagon. Moses McCracken, a youth, is robbed of $600 in a Sleepy Cat gambling den. Selwood forces the swindlers, Bartoe and Atkins, to return the money. Fyler opens a dry goods store, with "Big Haynes" running a mock auction of worthless goods in the place. Selwood learns the girl whose shoe he picked up is Christie, Fyler's daughter. Selwood makes Christie's acquaintance and warns Fyler that Atkins is a crook. The storekeeper refuses to believe it. Starbuck, attracted, tries to ingratiate himself with Christie. The girl's mind is poisoned against Selwood. Fyler is beaten and robbed. Christie, seeking Doctor Carpy, meets Selwood and informs him that Atkins has thrown her father out of his store, claiming to own it. Fyler is not badly hurt.

"He'll be pretty sore tomorrow morning. But that won't mean anything. Did Starbuck get those fellows out of the store for you?"

Little escaped Selwood. She turned her face quickly to one side. "No," she said, looking down, "he did not."

"What's the matter?"

"I—he—"

"Well?"

"I'm afraid I can't explain. I only wish"—she spoke from the heart—"I might never see him again!"

"Well," exclaimed Selwood, "if that's the situation I won't ask any more questions. So he wouldn't do anything?"

"No," blurted out Christie, now angry at the recollection, "not unless—"

"Unless what?"

She clasped her hands. "Unless I'd do something I refused to do—"

An expletive, like a pistol-shot, escaped the listener. "I promised to ask no more questions," said Selwood, but I've got to ask just one. Is he fit to live—or isn't he?"

Frightened, she looked up. "I'm making it worse and worse—I didn't mean to—please don't be so terribly angry. I see I must say what I hoped I might escape—he said he would help father—if I would marry him!"

Selwood did not laugh. His distress was too evident. "And you refused?" was all he said. "What did your father say?"

That cut deep. Christie could only hold the gambler to his word. "You said you wouldn't ask any more questions," she replied simply; but she had a turn of simplicity that was silencing.

Selwood drew a breath. "I'm glad I happened back tonight, anyway. Perhaps something can be done. Can your father hear us here?"

"He's asleep."

"But he has ears. There's nothing he might not hear, only I don't like listeners. I don't believe you're afraid of me. Step over this way a minute."

Selwood spoke when they stood together, away from possible eavesdroppers. "Your father isn't hurt so much," he said quickly, that he might not startle her. "But he can't very well do this, so you must. The minute day breaks tomorrow morning be dressed, leave this tent, and walk straight to the store. You needn't be afraid. You won't see anybody, but you will be watched, and safe, from the minute you leave the tent till you're back in it. When you get to the store, if you see an Indian sitting on the front steps, walk right up to him and ask for the key to the store. He'll give it to you. Ask him to watch the store till you come back after breakfast. He will. Then get Carpy, early, at the hotel, and have your father carried up to the store on his cot. He'd better stay there day and night—and you, too—till he's up!"

As Christie listened, a wave of contrition swept over her. She felt rebuked. To have slighted such a man as these words and this darkness revealed Selwood to her, in favor of a man such as she now realized Starbuck must be, was quite enough to humble her.

She looked at him without answering. Where he stood the big moon lighted his face, for he had surrendered the shadow to her own. "What," she asked, "are you going to do? I hope you won't go into any danger on my father's account."

He suppressed a laugh. "Not as much as I'm in now." It was a foolish thing to say. He tried to hedge, but, alarmed, she cut him off. "What do you mean? You've been far too kind to us to get into any trouble for our sakes. I only wish we were away from here."

"I'm willing to get into trouble if you'll stay. I'd rather hunt for a little than see you leave."

Christie tossed off a sense of embarrassment. "My leaving couldn't possibly mean anything to—any one in Sleepy Cat."

"If I could tell you what it would mean to me you might change your mind on that point." She regarded him in the moonlight rather bravely till he had said that much. After he spoke she was silent—almost receptive; but he added desperately, "There's just one miserable blamed reason why I can't."

Christie changed the subject instantly. "Wherever we go we couldn't find a kinder friend—father said this morning. It's when trouble comes that real friends count. And your influence would be good on father." Selwood started a little. "I'm so afraid now of his running with these awful gamblers, down in River street." Selwood looked away. Christie spoke on very seriously: "Of all men in the world I think gamblers are meanest—don't you?"

Selwood coughed. "To tell the truth," he said simply, "I never thought much about it. But," he added, pausing, "I guess maybe you're right. I'll be going. You'll remember to do just as I've told you? And please don't say anything whatever to your father about the matter till it's all over."

They walked together to the tent, then he turned his steps, reflectively, up-street in the direction of Fyler's store building; this he sauntered circumspectly about, inspecting each side with deliberate care and walking away from it thoughtfully. It looked like a hard nut to crack. He walked thence to the hotel, went upstairs, followed the narrow, low corridor to his room, unlocked the door, and went in. He lighted a lamp, adjusted the wick and the shade, and sat down on the side of his shabby bed. On the wall opposite him hung a framed woodcut of a missionary padre. In the silence Selwood looked long and thoughtfully at the old print. A cloud had long hung over the story of his own life, a cloud that Selwood had always felt might possibly be lifted by this old man—if he were yet alive. The uncertainty of this was one reason that helped to paralyze Selwood's resolve to find him.

Tonight the gambler acted with his natural determination. He rose, took the picture from the wall, turned down the wick of the lamp, blew it out, and with the woodcut under his arm, returned to the hall.

Carrying the picture to his office, he wrote and painted on a sheet of paper a sign and, returning to the hall, hung the picture on the wall beside his desk—about the most conspicuous place in the room. Underneath the picture he tacked the written sign:

For reliable information as to the whereabouts of this old padre I will pay one hundred ounces of gold dust.
JOHN SELWOOD.

Bill Pardaloe watched him put the portrait up. He read the sign haltingly at least twice before he turned to ask a question. "Where is he?"

"If he's alive," answered Selwood, "he's wandering somewhere around the mountain country among the Indians."

Pardaloe studied again the features of the long-haired old man in the print. "Won't any other padre do?" he snorted, picturing to his imagination the good times latent in one hundred ounces of gold dust.

"No other padre," said Selwood unfeelingly, "will do."

"What do you want with him?" demanded Pardaloe.

The answer was prompt and decisive. "That's my business. Get hold of Bob Scott, Bill, and bring him in here."

For ten years John Selwood had wanted to meet—yet lived in a certain dread of meeting—this padre; he had finally resolved to face him and, if it must come, to know the worst.

Other frontiersmen, drawn by Pardaloe's talk, crowded up to look at the picture. Selwood rid himself of the first rush of questioners and retired to his room, with Pardaloe, who had reappeared, bringing Scott. "There's been a mean deal put over this trader, Fyler," Selwood began, addressing both men. He told them the facts in the case, about which they had already heard the town talk. "And after robbing him of his stock of goods," continued Selwood, "they called him out of his tent, knocked him on the head, and took all his money, to make things easy for themselves. Fyler's girl is an innocent sufferer. Now this is what I called you both in for. I'm going to clean those fellows out of Fyler's store tonight. I'll need some help. Do you two want to join me? There'll be a fight. Take it or leave it, just as you like—no harm done either way."

Bob Scott never responded, to Selwood at least, with anything more than an affirmative grin; he wasted no words.

Pardaloe, however, had to have his talk. "Look here, John," he growled, "I know who's in that store."

"So do I," assented Selwood, unsympathetically.

"It's Atkins and Bartoe and Big Haynes."

"What then?"

"Yes, that's all right—'What then?'—but those fellows are loaded. They'll shoot. How' you going to do it? Goin' to coax 'em out with candy?"

Selwood, speaking low and quietly, laid out his plan. It promised the warmest kind of a time. Pardaloe's backward, skeptical expression changed into an anticipative glow. He offered neither further comment nor criticism, but rose on his bony shanks. "Let's go, John."

Scott ventured an amiable inquiry—he was, after all, the more prudent of the two adventurers that Selwood had called to his aid. "What kind of firearms have them fellows got in there?"

"Atkins is a little dangerous," said Selwood, for he felt he must be reasonably honest. "It's no use denying. Atkins is handy with a Colt's. Bartoe carries a bottle. He may not wake up until it's half over. He and Big Haynes use shotguns. They're as likely to hit each other as to hit us. What do you say?"

Pardaloe was ready. "I'll take the old gun along," he mused in cheerful anticipation.

Selwood was firm. "No artillery on this job."

Pardaloe protested with some violence. Selwood overbore him, threatening that if he persisted he should be left wholly out of the venture.

"I'll meet you at the barn at twelve'," said Selwood finally. "See Abe Cole, Bill and get a sledge-hammer. I'll bring a couple of axes from the barn. By the way," he added, "here's something I want you two to do before you go."

The three men passed unnoticed through the hall, and Selwood stopped them outside. He pointed to the big sign over the wide doorway:

JOHN SELWOOD, GAMBLER

"Get a ladder," he said to the two men, "and take that sign down. It never should have gone up there. Dave coaxed me into putting it up, after he got wounded that night down at Bartoe's—said it was too good advertising to lose. "Well," he continued with an acid touch, "I'm advertised. Everybody along the Mountain divide knows I'm a gambler. Why advertise it any longer?"

"Yes," growled Pardaloe, "they know you're a gambler. But if you haul down your sign how's everybody going to know where to find you?" he demanded triumphantly.

"Better for some of 'em if they didn't find me," retorted Selwood indifferently, "Stop your talk, dash it. Bring out the ladder and pull down the sign."

CHAPTER VII

An Early Morning Party

Filling in for one of his men, Selwood sat dealing at the large faro table near his desk. It was two hours since he had left Christie. In that interval she had had another visitor at the tent. Her father had already wakened, when Christie was called to the tent door by a voice and, looking cautiously out, saw Starbuck standing in the moonlight.

"I didn't want you to think I went away with any hard feelings," he said, explaining himself calmly to Christie and throwing into his words that touch of sympathy and interest he was always able to summon. Christie listened with reluctance. But as her caller was at no loss for words, he was soon heard by her father, who, raising his voice, called him, over Christie's protest, into the tent.

"Here's the man," he said, "that can give us the help we need, Christie, if you'll treat him in the way you'd ought to.

Christie burst into tears. The obligation of secrecy was on her—she thought she knew why, now; but she would not resist the satisfaction of a covert threat. "If Mr. Starbuck won't help us," she exclaimed, "we may find somebody in Sleepy Cat that will."

She was sorry the instant she had spoken, but it was too late to recall her words.

"Anybody that goes near the store without me," Starbuck said calmly, "will get riddled with buckshot—so," he added, looking first at Christie and then at her father, "don't make any mistake like that."

He marched with dignity out of the tent. Fyler kept up a weak fire of reproach. Christie was used to such things on more subjects than one, and only continued to listen silently. What thoughts were in her mind, her father, least of all, could have surmised. She gave him some refreshment presently, and he fell into an uneasy sleep. That moment seemed to rouse her from her apathy and signalize her resolve.

She rose cautiously but hurriedly, caught up a shawl that lay across her cot, opened her little trunk, and stealthily drew out a scarf.

Pausing, and looking at her father only long enough to be sure he slept, she carefully lowered the wick of the lantern, blew out the light, and stepped with as little noise as possible to the tent door. Wrapping herself in her shawl, and winding her scarf about her head and neck, she pushed open the fly and stood alone out in the moonlight.

Once started, Christie did not hesitate. She walked swiftly along the street, hardly knowing which way to look in her quest, but determined to follow it. The only place where she hoped she might make a successful inquiry was at the big barn; and toward this she directed her steps.

She was being trailed, though she did not realize it. Believing herself unobserved and unseen, she pursued her course, and it was only when Bob Scott stepped out of a shadow in front of her that she was frightened.

"Were you looking for somebody, lady?" he asked.

Christie jumped, but Scott's inoffensive manner reassured her. She had seen him in company with Selwood at the store, and some instinct told her he meant no harm.

"I am looking for some one."

"Who is it?"

"He's the superintendent of the freighting line."

"I guess I know who you mean. He was down to see your father tonight."

"Oh, she cried in confusion. "I don't mean Mr. Starbuck."

Scott was confident. "I don't, either. You mean John Selwood. If you do want to see him, I think I can find him. But I'll have to be gone a few minutes. Now, here's the barn"—he pointed to the big structure close at hand. "If you'd walk down with me and wait a few minutes in the office, I'll have him here."

Still in fear and trembling, Christie accompanied her guide to the barn office. Two formidable-looking dogs rushed to the door as Scott opened it. Admonishing them, he turned with a quiet grin. A lighted lantern on the desk revealed the interior to Christie. "If you can sit here for five minutes," said Scott, "these dogs will guard you better than anybody in Sleepy Cat could do it. Just pet them a little." Christie made friends cautiously with the two dogs. "We call one Chloe," explained Scott, "and this is Sweetheart. They're Mr. Selwood's favorite wagon dogs—half bull and half mastiff—and if anybody tries to come into this office while I'm gone, they'll eat 'em up. Are you willing to wait with them?"

Christie smiled rather mournfully. "I suppose I can't help it," she said uneasily. "Please hurry!"

Scott lost no time in getting to Selwood, whom he found at his desk. The Indian whispered to him. Selwood seized his hat, followed Scott out the back door and the two, singly, and walking in different directions joined Christie.

Chloe and Sweetheart, barking furiously, sprang up to be fondled when Selwood opened the door. Scott took the dogs outside, and Selwood turned to Christie. "I've been looking everywhere for you—and if I hadn't seen Mr. Scott, I never should have found you. Are you in business here, Mr. Selwood?"

"Why—yes."

"What is it, may I ask?"

He answered haltingly—glad it was dark. "Well, I'm mixed up in different kinds of business here—that's what got me into trouble with your father." He spoke with a laugh—or tried to. "I run this Russell and Wentworth freighting outfit," he continued. "I suppose if I called myself anything, it might be a mining man. What has happened?"

She was so confused and overcome now that she could hardly summon the words she wanted. "Nothing has happened. I feared what might happen—tonight. You didn't tell me," she ventured, "just what you were going to do about the store." Then she added disconsolately, "Mr. Starbuck came over again."

Selwood looked keenly at her. "What did he want?"

"First he said," she began brokenly, "he wanted to turn the store back to father."

"Was that all?"

"No."

"What else?"

"If—"

"If—what?"

"The same condition he named before."

"If you'd marry him, eh?"

"Yes."

"Well, what did you say?"

"I said—what I said before. Then he made a threat. He said that anybody who went near the store without him would get killed."

"And you wanted to let me know?"

She fingered the fringe of her scarf, but looked steadily at him. "To be careful," she said.

He took her back to the tent and parted with her, hard as it seemed to do, at the fly. "Why did you want to warn me?" he asked.

"To repay your kindness." They spoke in low tones.

"Well," Selwood said lightly, "if I get hurt, you'll know it was while I was trying to follow your advice."

He was still laughing as she slipped hurriedly into the tent.

Shortly after three o'clock that morning two men with the barest of shifts for disguise, and followed by two dogs, whining and leaping at their heels, left the stage barn. One man carried three common axes, of the heavy type used in the tie camps along the river; the other carried a sledge of a size and weight that would have rendered it useless in the hands of an ordinary man. But Pardaloe, Scott, and their companion in the adventure were not ordinary men; the first was a giant in physique, the second dangerous in encounter, and the third fertile in resource.

As the two men neared Fort street, Selwood, stepping out of the shadow of the building, joined them. He wore like the others, a bandanna tied with little ceremony across his nose; a flat wagoner's hat shaded his eyes. "You brought the right dogs?" asked Selwood, looking at them.

"I did," muttered Pardaloe, as Chloe and her mate tangled themselves up between his legs. "'n if any one of 'em gets killed, somebody's goin' to get dumped right down on the rock pile along with 'em."

Fort street was quiet as a graveyard—not a soul was stirring and the party reached the store unobserved. They halted in the shadow thrown on the north side of the low building. Selwood tiptoed to the corner and inspected the front doors—they looked substantial. The whole front was exposed to the blaze of the moonlight, and it appeared like suicide to attempt a forcible entry. Every aperture, he well knew, was barred or nailed and would give only before a determined assault.

McGraw Watches His Hirelings

The photograph shows Roger Bresnahan, coach, John McGraw and Rogers Hornsby, watching the other Giant players in their morning workout. This was McGraw's first outing with the Giants, he having just returned from his vacation in Cuba.

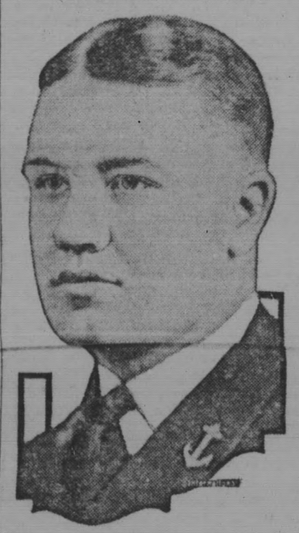
Siren Jeopardizes Jack Dempsey's Job

Jack Dempsey may lose his position as deputy fire marshal, to which he was appointed three months ago, as a result of an investigation begun by the Los Angeles police commission to determine under what authority the former heavyweight champion equipped one of his automobiles with a siren and red lights.

Dempsey declared, following the opening of the investigation, that he has not used the fire siren on his car since it was installed after his appointment as a deputy fire marshal.

Both the Los Angeles fire chief and the chief of police said they had not given the boxer permission to equip his automobile with siren and lights such as used by police and fire cars.

Naval Star to Coach



Frank H. Wickhorst, whose home is in Chicago, was captain of the 1926 football team at the United States Naval academy, and it is announced by Paul E. Bolting, director of athletics at the University of Iowa, that Wickhorst has been engaged as line coach. Wickhorst will report to Iowa for active duty September 15. He was an all-American tackle in 1926.

Dual Agreement Places Limit Upon Activities

President John Grier Hibben, at the alumni luncheon at Princeton, said the dual athletic agreement with Yale embodies the phrasing of the old "Big Three" agreement except for the fact Harvard is not listed as a party to it. Thus, except for the new clause, Princeton's athletics of the future will be guided by regulations that have been in existence for the past three or four years.

The new rule does not prohibit such post-season activities as the track meets with Oxford and Cambridge, but is designed to keep the institutions from engaging in such contests as the Tournament of Roses annual at Pasadena, to which the football teams of both Yale and Princeton have been invited in the past.

Gene Tunney Holds Many Honors Now, It Appears

If Gene Tunney holds the title a few years and continues being enrolled as an officer until then, at the rate up to the present time, he'll belong to everything but the Swiss navy.

Gene already has enough badges and titles and enough authority to arrest about 10,000,000 people—if they break the law.

He's a deputy sheriff in New York, a captain of police in Minneapolis, a deputy county clerk in Brooklyn, a "cop" in many New York and New Jersey towns, a constable here, a detective there, an officer in this military company, a member of that, a motorcycle cop in three communities and some sort of deputy officer elsewhere.

Regrets Losing Kelly

John J. McGraw regrets losing George Kelly but believes the trade which brings Eddie Roush from Cincinnati to the Giants in exchange for Kelly will be advantageous to both players. Terry will play first base for the Giants, McGraw said, and Roush will be used in his old position in center field. "I have a high regard for Kelly," the Giant manager said, "but it is my belief that both Kelly and Roush will be benefited by the exchange. The trade involved no cash."

Rule Makers Revise 1927 Gridiron Code

Placing of a fifteen-yard penalty on illegal shifts, moving the goal posts back to the end lines, reducing the time outs to three in each half, placing a time limit on the length of time players may remain in a huddle, and adoption of rules to govern lateral passes were salient features of the annual meeting of the football rules committee.

The football rules committee has announced radical revisions in the playing code for the 1927 season. The outstanding changes are:

1. The goal posts have been placed back ten yards to the back line of the end zone.
2. A time limit of thirty seconds has been placed in putting the ball into play.
3. A limit of fifteen seconds has been put on the huddle.
4. A pause of approximately one second must be made in the shift play before the ball is passed.
5. A fumbled punt will be regarded hereafter as a dead ball and not a loose ball.
6. A missed backward pass, other than from the snapper-back, will be a dead ball and not a loose ball.

GOOD CONDITION NEED OF RUNNER

Proper Preliminary Practice Is One Big Essential.

Earn a place on the college track team? Run the hundred in 10 4-5 flat! Any normal boy who is willing to take the trouble can do it, for runners are more often made than born. Carl Easton Williams in the American Boy Magazine says that racing is chiefly a matter of conditioning.

"The most common mistake fellows make is that of going into athletics without proper preliminary physical training," he points out. "The boy who is soft through lack of exercise should not go out to the track or field and exert himself to the limit in competition.

"You should look forward to athletics and prepare yourself by spending a year, or at least some months, in a gymnasium to strengthen, first, the abdominal region and the back; then, of secondary importance, the muscles of the shoulders, chest, arms and legs; remember—you're not going to run with your legs alone; if you acquire good form you will 'run all over.'

Don't try to crowd a year's training in three weeks.

"If you're going out for track in the spring it would be wise to do some cross-country running during the fall and winter. Then allow yourself three months in the spring for actual training in your specialty."

"When you do start the actual training, build your strength gradually. You improve faster by training four times a week than by working every day.

"A good sprinter," Mr. Williams continues, "is symmetrically developed. He runs with his whole body, not with his legs alone." And this running all over is, in the last analysis, a matter of form or efficiency. It means "getting the whole body" into it, using the strength of every part. Charley Paddock illustrates this in his stride. "Charley makes a great point of lifting the knees. The higher the knees, Paddock found, the farther forward one can get his feet, and hence the longer is his stride. Sometimes, when running his best, Paddock has hit his chin with his knees."

Everett Scott Back in Game With Baltimore

Everett Scott, veteran major league shortstop, will be back in baseball this year as a member of the Baltimore Orioles of the International league. Scott announced at Fort Wayne, Ind., he had come to terms with Jack Dunn, Baltimore manager.

He is expected to take the place in the Baltimore lineup vacated by Joe Boley, sold to the Philadelphia Athletics. Scott was forced to quit in the middle of last season with an injured leg, after the White Sox had released him to the Cincinnati Reds.

Fight for Maloney

By reason of his recent defeat of Jack Delaney it is expected that Jimmy Maloney (shown in the photograph) will be matched to fight Jack Dempsey in the open air some time in June. A match with the winner and Gene Tunney is not unlikely.

Speaking of Harvard, that university carries a fairly heavy athletic program.

Fourteen of these sports depend chiefly upon the gate receipts of football to support them.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

$700,000,000 Surplus for Fiscal Year in Sight, According to Mellon.

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY Mellon has officially admitted that the largest reduction in the public debt on record may be accomplished in the present fiscal year ending June 30 next.

A surplus considerably in excess of $500,000,000, representing the difference between ordinary receipts and ordinary expenditures, is assured. Heretofore, while members of congress and others have insisted that the half-billion mark would be reached, Mr. Mellon has been unwilling to boost his estimate beyond the $383,000,000 total announced by the budget bureau last December.

That the surplus will actually exceed $600,000,000, and may go as high as $700,000,000, is now asserted by some of the experts whose estimates have usually been considerably above those of the treasury and whose predictions have been made good in previous years.

A surplus of $500,000,000 will mean an actual debt reduction for the fiscal year 1927 in excess of $1,000,000,000. Debt retirement through the statutory sinking fund will amount to nearly $340,000,000 and retirements from payments from foreign nations will represent more than $230,000,000. Debt retirements otherwise than by means of the surplus will amount to about $570,000,000. Adding a $500,000,000 surplus to this amount will mean a total reduction in the public debt of $1,070,000,000.

The debt reduction has exceeded $1,000,000,000 in only three of the last seven years, the highest total being in 1920, when the debt was cut down by $1,185,000,000. In 1922 the debt reduction amounted to $1,014,000,000, and in 1924 to $1,098,000,000. The debt was reduced in the fiscal year 1925 by $735,000,000 and in 1926 by $873,000,000. The total debt on December 31, 1926, was $18,975,349,765.

If the surplus runs as high as $615,000,000, and many financial experts believe it may, the record debt reduction of the year 1920 will be equaled. A surplus above this amount will mean the breaking of all records in annual debt retirement.

While the treasury still lacks accurate totals on income-tax receipts it was indicated that at least $580,000,000 has been collected. This amount would represent an increase of $85,000,000 over March income tax payments in 1926. Complete reports from the internal revenue collectors may bring the total up above $600,000,000.

ON MARCH 16 Harry F Sinclair, millionaire oil magnate, was found guilty of contempt of the United States senate by a jury in the District of Columbia Supreme court. The case grew out of the senate investigation of the Tea Pot dome oil scandal three years ago, when Sinclair refused to answer interrogations of the senate committee. Found guilty on all four counts of the indictments against him, Sinclair faces a jail sentence of from one month to a year in the District jail and a fine of from $100 to $1,000. The sentence has not been imposed, pending the disposition of the motion for a new trial made by Sinclair's counsel, and its execution will be further delayed by the appeal which will be taken to the District Court of Appeals, and ultimately to the United States Supreme court, according to defense attorneys, if the new trial is denied.

Sinclair, whose contempt trial is the first of the criminal proceedings growing out of the oil investigation to be decided, was indicted under Section 102 of the Revised Statutes, the same section which will be invoked against Samuel Insull, the Chicago utility magnate; his attorney, Daniel Schuyler of Chicago, and other witnesses who refused to testify before the Reed slush-fund committee, if they are ever brought to book.

Sinclair, refusing to answer the committee's questions on the advice of his counsel, denied the pertinency of the queries, asserted that answer might jeopardize the outcome of litigation in which his company—the Mammoth Oil company—was engaged with the government and denied the authority of the committee to question him on matters which had become the subject of litigation.

Justice Hitz in his charge warned the jury that the pertinency of the questions had already been decided by the court as a matter of law and that neither the fact that Sinclair, in refusing to testify, acted on the advice of counsel or may have believed he had a legal right to refuse if he wished, could be considered as a defense for the oil man.

THE first meeting of the new federal radio commission was held at Washington on March 15. One of the first acts of the new commission was to announce dates, March 29 to April 1, for public hearings, the purpose of which will be to obtain methods of reducing radio interference. A tentative schedule of topics for discussion includes proposals for widening the broadcasting bands of wave lengths, a limitation of power, and reduction in frequency separation, simultaneous broadcasting with the same frequency, a division of time broadcasting stations, a consolidation of broadcasting service and a limitation of the number of stations. The hearings will not be open for individual claims or complaints.

BECAUSE he published an article in the Christian Enquirer declaring that the God of the Bible "preferred the savory smell of roast cutlets to the odors of boiled cabbage," Ernest V. Sterry at Toronto, Canada, was found guilty by a Canadian jury of blasphemous libel under an ancient British statute making it a crime to criticize the Christian God. Sterry's defense was that he was merely trying to liberalize public opinion and that he thought his article would clear the controversy over the personality of the Deity.

A UNITED STATES Supreme court decision of considerable importance to many communities, especially in the southern states, was handed down on March 14. The court held as unconstitutional the Louisiana state and New Orleans municipal segregation codes under which negroes are barred from residence in predominantly white communities where a majority of the white residents have not given their consent in writing.

PREMIER MUSSOLINI has undertaken to organize a vast insurance organization to guarantee long-time credits extended by Italian manufacturers to foreign purchasers of Italian-made merchandise.

It is estimated that before the plans can be fully carried out the new credit insurance institute must have a fully paid up capital of $10,000,000,000 lire—nearly $450,000,000. The field of operation is so large it is thought this money will be easily found. Fascist circles insist that all the money invested in this organization should be Italian, thus freeing it from any foreign influence whatever.

In conjunction with the credit insurance the government plans to station able business men abroad to keep in closest touch with market conditions throughout the world and to assist in placing large accounts for Italian firms. These "observation posts" would maintain constant touch with the homeland through the consular service and other agencies.

Italian industry is in a serious condition. Many factories are closed or running on short time or with limited crews. It is estimated that 250,000 people are out of work, or five times as many as could not find employment a few months ago. It is to remedy this condition and to insure an increase in Italian markets that the Mussolini government is making strenuous efforts to find foreign markets.

THE completion of the Moffat road tunnel through the Rocky mountains near Denver may bring about a new grouping of railroads and produce one of the most gigantic railroad combinations in this country. The tunnel is now nearing completion. When it is ready for use it will mean the shortening of the distance between Denver and Salt Lake City by approximately 300 miles, and will also eliminate much of the heavy grades. The tunnel, while built by the state of Colorado, is under lease by the Moffat line, a road that of itself is of no importance except that it controls this new way to the West. A fairly well-founded story current in Denver is to the effect that lines are being laid for the linking up by control of traffic arrangements of the Burlington, the Denver & Rio Grande Western and the Western Pacific with the Moffat road. If such a combination of interests should be effected, it would constitute a part of the Burlington, Great Northern and Northern Pacific combination. If in addition to this federation of northern and central transcontinental routes, there is anything in the reports of Burlington inspiration behind the gradual linking up of short lines from the Ohio river to New Orleans and the Gulf, there would be in prospect a rail system of a magnitude never imagined before in America.

UNITED STATES SENATOR William H. King of Utah, on a visit to Porto Rico and other Carribean islands, proposed to visit the republic of Haiti, but the Haitian government refused him permission to land. The Haitian government held it was free to bar Mr. King, as he was making the visit as a private citizen, not as a senator. Senator King has been outspoken in his criticism of the present regime in Haiti headed by President Luis Borno. The Haitian administration is under the guidance of the American government, represented by a force of marines. The State department made an effort, through Brig. Gen. John H. Russell, American high commissioner in Haiti, to exert its influence in an effort to have the order changed, but without success, the President of the republic claiming that the presence of Senator King would be a menace to the peace and prosperity of the people because of the feeling of the public in relation to his efforts to recall the American troops from Haiti. Senator King visited Santo Domingo, but did not make any effort to land at Puerto Prince. The senator said he abandoned his plans to visit Haiti, as he feared his visit there might cause a clash between the American military forces and the people.

THE libel suit of Aaron Sapiro against Henry Ford for $1,000,000 because of the charges it is claimed were made in the Dearborn Independent, owned by Mr. Ford, that Sapiro was the head of a Jewish combination organized for the purpose of defrauding the American farmers, opened at Detroit on March 14, and it is expected to continue for approximately 60 days. Attorneys for Sapiro stated in their opening arguments that testimony covering 141 points would be introduced.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE has indicated that the United States government will not consider the establishment of a protectorate over the government of Nicaragua as requested by President Diaz. The President is desirous of encouraging peaceful conditions in Central America, but feels that to take on a permanent obligation to maintain order in Nicaragua would be too much.

The proposed alliance is described as somewhat similar to that entered into between the United States and Haiti in 1915. It would allow this government to intervene in case of revolution to maintain order, and give the United States limited supervision over Nicaraguan conditions. Another condition of the Diaz proposal is that a big loan should be made to Nicaragua.

THE Mexican government is trying to induce the American government to await the decision of the Mexican Supreme court on the question of the constitutionality of the Mexican land laws before lifting the arms embargo. American oil men have asked for injunctions against the enforcement of the law that would deprive them of the petroleum interests, and a decision in this case is expected within a short tme. It is intimated that President Calles may find this decision an easy way out of the difficulty, as the courts may decide that the laws creating the difficulties are unconstitutional.

Heads National Body to Aid Hog Breeders

The swine industry of the United States is to have its "Judge Landis"—an administrator to guide a nation-wide movement to promote the production of better hogs, it became known when A. F. Sinex of Tama, Iowa, president of the National Swine Growers' association, announced the appointment of Robert J. Evans of Chicago, known as "dean of hog breeders," as national administrator of the swine extension plan to mobilize farmers, breeders, packers, retailers, veterinarians, feed manufacturers, agricultural college professors, county agents and consumers to improve the quality of pork.

Mr. Evans, who has been authorized to open headquarters in the Pedigree Record building, Union stockyards, Chicago, has only recently returned from Tama.

"The hog population decreased from 68,189,000 head in 1923 to 52,536,000 on January 1 of this year," said Mr. Evans. "Farmers are able to market their 60 cents corn most effectively by the hog route. At 60 cents a bushel, a long price, hogs are now costing farmers $6.25 a hundred-weight to produce. At $12 a hundred-weight this means a profit greater than any other farm enterprise can show.

"All farmers are not standing helplessly by and waiting for legislation to remedy their economic condition. The swine growers at least will attempt to organize the whole industry for efficient self-help."

Napoleon Bonaparte

(Part II)

FOR the son of a Corsican lawyer to plan a world empire, nowadays, would be sheer insanity. But in Napoleon Bonaparte's time and country almost anything was possible to the man who knew how to use his chances. Tavern waiters became field marshals; servants rose to dukes. For the first time in France's history it was the man, not his ancestry, that counted. Bonaparte, being the greatest genius in France, rose highest in the mighty upheaval that followed the overthrow of old customs. Having, as first consul, set matters to rights at home, he drew sword against all Europe. Heretofore long, time-wasting campaigns and acres of red tape had marked every war. Bonaparte changed all this. Whirlwind campaigns and defiance of all outworn military traditions formed the keynote of his warfare. On May 13, 1800, he hurried an army across the Alps, captured Piedmont by a brilliant victory over the Austrians at Marengo, June 14, and dictated peace terms to Austria. Other countries, scared by the example, followed suit, and, for the first time in many years, universal peace seemed established all over the civilized world.

Meantime, in France, Bonaparte was forwarding his personal ambitions to such good effect that, when the project of crowning him emperor of the French was broached, it was carried by a popular vote of 3,000,000 to 3,000. He sent for Pope Pius VII to crown him at Paris amid imposing ceremonies, December 2, 1804, but at the last moment he snatched the imperial diadem from the pope's hands and crowned himself. He then placed the crown on the head of Josephine, his wife. The following year he became king of Italy as well.

And now came a change of character so remarkable as to support the old rumor that Bonaparte the general and Napoleon the emperor were two different men. From being shy, lean and silent, Napoleon grew assertive, fat, talkative. The rigid, temperate simplicity of early days gave way to court etiquette, pomp and imperial splendor. His court was brilliant and extravagant.

England, resenting certain of France's annexations, declared war, and Napoleon prepared to invade Great Britain. But Russia, Austria and Sweden formed an alliance with England and the plan was changed. Napoleon, with 180,000 men, crossed Bavaria, took Vienna and met the combined Austrian and Russian armies at Austerlitz. Each of the three armies was commanded by an emperor. After a long and bloody battle Napoleon defeated the allies with fearful loss. He then thrashed Prussia at Jena and Auerstadt and captured Berlin. Russia's army was marching to Prussia's aid, but Napoleon met and overwhelmed it at Friedland, June 14, 1807, and forced the czar to sue for peace. He next conquered Spain and Portugal, and extended his conquests throughout the continent of Europe. He made his brother king of Spain and his brother-in-law king of Naples, and lavished similar royal honors on others of his family.

Spain, dissatisfied that a low-born Corsican should rule it, revolted. England and Portugal allied themselves with the Spaniards and the "War of the Peninsula" began; the English army being commanded by Sir Arthur Wellesley, afterward duke of Wellington. Austria took this time to rise against Napoleon. The emperor hurried an army across the frontier and inflicted a crushing defeat on the Austrian host at Wagram, July 6, 1809, and dictated humiliating terms of peace to the beaten country. Nearly all the world was now at the Corsican genius' feet.

Yet he was far from satisfied. He saw that he held his sovereignty through sheer strength; Austria's action had taught him that the instant his back was turned the beaten nations would spring at him like wild animals at their trainer. He knew that, even while kings and countries cringed to him, they secretly despised him as an upstart. Only so long as he could overawe foes by active, aggressive power could he hope to retain his mastery.

He had no son to inherit his title. Moreover, he now saw his boyish mistake in having married a stupid woman of the people. He had long since outgrown his early adoration for the fickle Josephine. He calmly proceeded to divorce her, and on March 11, 1810, he married the Archduchess Marie Louise, daughter of the emperor of Austria. The proud Austrian monarch had no choice but to submit, and to sell his daughter for the sake of his country's welfare. Marie Louise cared nothing for her imperial bridegroom, and in his later days of adversity promptly deserted him. They had one son, who, while in his cradle, was proclaimed king of Rome. This son died of consumption at twenty-one.

The years 1810 and 1811 marked the flood-tide of Napoleon's prosperity. His dominions extended from Naples to Denmark. He was proclaimed ruler of Spain, Italy, Switzerland, Holland and most of the German states. Russia, Austria and other nations were at his feet. England alone held out against him. Never before or since has such tremendous authority been vested in one man.

Fruit of the Baobab Tree

The baobab, a native of western and northern Africa, is sometimes called the monkey-bread tree. It is one of the largest known trees, its trunk being sometimes no less than 30 feet in diameter, although at that size its height will not be over 70 to 75 feet. The fruit tastes like gingerbread, with a pleasant acid flavor. The juice is used medicinally and also to a certain extent employed as a seasoning, and the pulverized leaves are also used similarly.

Treasury Experts Not Easy Persons to Fool

Many and clever are the "get-rich-quick" schemes that flood the United States treasury, but the experts there are practically fool-proof. The government redeems all torn, burned or otherwise damaged money, thus saving the people millions of dollars annually. By giving good money for mutilated money the Treasury department saved citizens $4,000,000,000 during 1925. Appeals for redemption of money that is retrieved from animals' stomachs, that is partly chewed by infants, or that is burned are granted if two-thirds of it is turned in and the serial number is legible. Recently a man sent in a cigar box full of green paper. He said it was $148 that rats had chewed up. But the experts found that it contained mostly paper and only a $1 bill that had been run through a meatchopper.

"As the Twig Is Bent"

"The world is work crazy," asserts Roger Payne, "and addiction to work is just as bad as any other vice, such as idleness, drink or gambling." The lack of proper home influences, of course, is to blame for most of this waywardness. Most men usually attribute their downfall to the fact that at a tender and impressionable age they were led into their first work by older companions.

Consolation

The late Arnold Daly, the brilliant actor, said one day to a New York dramatic critic:

"Who'd have believed, before the World war, that actresses would appear on the stage of New York, Paris and Berlin dressed in nothing but a few ropes of pearls?

"I met at a supper party the other night a beautiful Topeka dancing girl whose nude dances, after a great success in Europe, turned out to be a frost on Broadway. She was pretty blue. In an effort to console her I said:

"'Never mind, my dear. It's the old story, you know, of the prophet who hasn't much on 'er in her own country.'"

Farmer—Yeah, it should be. I've put all my money in it.

Popular San Diego Woman Recovers From Long Illness

Amazing Improvement in Mrs. Jester's Health Surprises Friends. Serious Ailments Caused by Nervous Breakdown Relieved and Strength Restored by Tanlac. Looks and Feels Better Than Ever

"Tanlac has certainly done wonders for me; I cannot praise it enough," declares Mrs. T. D. Jester, 1268 Pennsylvania Avenue, San Diego, Calif. "I had suffered a nervous breakdown, and for many months afterward I continued to get worse and worse, despite all the different nerve medicines I tried. Nothing seemed to help until I tried Tanlac.

"I was as near to being a complete nervous and physical wreck as I could be, without entirely collapsing. The slightest noise would make me want to scream, and after retiring it would be hours before I could sleep. I would awaken with terrible nervous headaches and the slightest exertion would tire me out so that I would be trembling. I lost weight and appetite. I tried Tanlac with little expectation of improvement.

"Before I had taken all of the first bottle, I developed a ravenous appetite, and was sleeping better. I continued to improve rapidly and felt like a different person entirely. In less than three weeks I had gained seven pounds! Later, my weight went up from 105 to 125 pounds."

If your troubles are similar to those from which Mrs. Jester suffered so keenly, get relief before it is too late! Tanlac will doubtless help you just as it helped Mrs. Jester—and as it has helped thousands of other sufferers.

It is a wonderful tonic medicine, for run-down and nervous conditions and for digestive disorders. All good druggists sell Tanlac—get your first bottle today! Over 40 million bottles sold.

A Good Suggestion

It has been suggested by a local capitalist and philanthropist, that the old bell at the firehouse be removed to the belfry of the grammar schcol to be used in cases of emergency. The recent fire that started in the basement of the building caused much alarm because there were no signals to warn the class rooms of the blaze. The bell would have filled the bill. The suggestion is a good one.

Dr. Whitewolf Robbed by Bandits

Doctor Whitewolf, who left here last fall on a healing tour of the country, met with a sad mishap at Livermore last Sunday. He was set upon by bandits, who robbed him of $250. The doctor was taken to a Livermore hospital in an unconscious condition. After regaining consciousness he told the police that he was struck by some one in an automobile, who relieved him of his purse. The doctor accomplished his healing by the laying on of hands and the imbibing of the brew from herbs which he himself prepared. He has been a well-known character in Menlo Park for the past twenty-one years. As a young man he was an Indian chief in Oklahoma. For many years he toured the United States as an Indian medicine man, selling concoctions made from herbs and was quite successful. His lectures have been heard by thousands. Whitewolf was the first man in Tonopah and is said to be one of the discovers of that famous mining town. He made a fortune there but lost it in bad speculations. No doubt he will seek Weepah, the last gold excitement. However, his age is against him as he has passed his 86 mile post, too old for any strenuous labors after the filty lucre that lies hidden in the Nevada desert.

TWO DECADES OF DEVELOPMENT IN TELEPHONE ART

Range of Long Distance Has Been Increased Five-fold in Twenty Years

Twenty years ago Long Distance telephone service was limited to about 1,700 miles. It was possible at that time to talk from Boston in the east to as far westward as Omaha, but it was entirely impossible to reach any point farther west.

In the twenty years that have elapsed since then the range of telephone communication has been increased five-fold and more, so that today it is possible to talk by way of New York, Chicago and San Francisco from Havana in the Island of Cuba to Catalina Island, off the southern coast of California—a distance of 5,500 miles. But the important point lies not so much in the fact that the range of communication has thus been extended, but that the quality has been improved to such an extent that talking over such long distances is as easy as it is over a very short distance, as, for example, from one house to another in one of our larger cities.

Much study was needed to bring about this state of affairs. It required an age of experimentation, research and invention. The range of telephone transmission greatly increased by the application of the loading pot, first applied to telephone circuits in 1900, was further extended by the development and application of the repeater or current amplifier. Improvements and economies have been effected by the use of phantom circuits, the development of overhead and underground cable and the application of the carrier-current system permitting several simultaneous telephone talks over a single telephone circuit.

In the same period has come the development of the radio telephone, beginning in 1915 when speech was first transmitted in this way from Arlington, Va., across the continent to San Francisco, over the Pacific to the Hawaiian Islands and across the Atlantic to Paris. Two-way conversation between ship and shore was developed in 1922, one-way wireless talk between New York and London in 1923, and two-way conversation in 1926.

Thus both the range of transmission and the speed of connection has reached a point almost undreamed of even by telephone men as short a time as two decades ago.

10,700,000 FAMILIES TELEPHONE USERS

About two-thirds, or 11,400,000, of the total number of telephones in the Bell System in the United States are residence telephones. These 11,400,000 residence, or as they are sometimes called, "home" telephones, serve approximately 10,700,000 families. The excess of residence telephones over the number of families having telephones is due, in large part, to the use of extension stations. More and more the average home is being equipped with extension telephones so that weary housewives will not have to walk way upstairs or all the way downstairs, in order to answer the telephone, or to put in a call.

Expert attention has been directed to developing a style of type for telephone directories that provides the highest degree of legibility for a given size.
